Ileana Invites Mrs. Simpson, Former King To Her Villa

Name of Princess Once Linked With That of 'David Windsor.'

Wedding of Exiles Will Be Modest

Edward, Gay, Talks With Brownlow on Plans, Plays Golf.

World Copyright, 1936, by United Press.

Cannes, France, Dec. 14.—Former King Edward may spend Christmas with Mrs. Wallis Warfield Simpson at a Viennese castle with Archduchess Ileana von Hapsburg as their chaperon, it was reported tonight.

The name of Ileana, once the "madcap princess" of Rumania, was linked with that of Edward six years ago before she married the Archduke Anton of Austria.

Mrs. Simpson, it was revealed, has received an invitation to visit the Hapsburg villa on the outskirts of Vienna.

The villa is less than two hours' drive from the castle of Baron Rothschild, where Edward has taken refuge from the storm that came with his abdication from the British throne.

The archduchess, called the most beautiful princess in Europe when she married in 1931 after several stormy love affairs, was said to have offered to chaperone Edward and Mrs. Simpson.

Ileana no longer is a madcap, but the sedate mother of three children.

Mrs. Simpson was said to be undecided about accepting the invitation, fearing a meeting with Edward now might jeopardize her pending divorce.

If she goes to Vienna to meet him she probably will be accompanied by her "Aunt Bessie," Mrs. Buchanan Merryman, of Washington, D. C., it was said.

Wedding to Be Quiet.

Copyright, 1936, by the United Press.

Enzesfeld, Austria (Tuesday), Dec. 15.—Former King Edward and Mrs. Wallis Warfield Simpson plan a quiet, simple wedding, attended only by a few close friends, it was reported today.

Edward, gay and chipper after a day during which he played golf on the estate of Baron Eugene de Rothschild, and sang snatches of jazz tunes as he walked, talked over marriage plans with his friend, Lord Brownlow, last night.

Brownlow is expected to return to Cannes later today, bearing messages from the former King to the American woman for whom he forsook a throne. The time and place of the wedding have not been fixed, but many of the former King's friends believe it will be in Austria, where he and Mrs. Simpson have spent many happy hours together.

Edward, Rothschild and Brownlow dined together last night and later went to the ballroom where a motion picture was shown. The former king had planned originally to visit Vienna and spend the evening in some of the gay cafes where he and Mrs. Simpson danced when they were there earlier this year. But he abandoned that for a talk with Brownlow over his plans.

Although it was reported that Edward planned to see a Vienna specialist about ear trouble and nervousness, those close to him said he appeared in the best of health and was recovering from the nervous fatigue caused by the strain of his abdication.

King Busy on Birthday.

London, England Dec. 14 (AP).—George VI set about building a reputation as "the businessman King" today by spending 150 minutes transacting state business while his family waited at home to celebrate his forty-first birthday.

The new monarch first dispatched to Parliament his pledge "with God's help, and supported by my dear wife, to uphold the honor of the realm," and then turned to practical affairs of state at Buckingham Palace.

Hundreds stood in the rain to catch a glimpse of the new King-Emperor as he arrived at Buckingham.

Queen Elizabeth, kept from Saturday's ceremony of accession of her husband-monarch by illness, arose from bed today to officiate at a family birthday party.

Guests included Queen Mother Mary, the Duke and Duchess of Gloucester, the Princess Royal, the Earl of Athlone, brother of Queen Mary, and the new King's daughters, the Princesses Elizabeth and Margaret Rose. The Duke of Kent, youngest brother of King George, was unable to be present.

Roosevelt Reaches Charleston Today

By the Associated Press.

With President Roosevelt at sea, Dec. 14.—President Roosevelt's flotilla hummed with activity tonight as members of the Presidential party packed and said their farewells in preparation for landing early tomorrow in Charleston, S. C.

Tonight the cruisers Indianapolis and Chester and the destroyer Phelps steamed off the Florida coast. The Indianapolis will dock at 7 a. m. tomorrow, a few blocks from the special Presidential train due to leave at 9 a. m. and arrive in Washington tomorrow night.

Leaders of Social Set Edward Enjoys Call Rebuke Unjust.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

London, ec, 14.—The Archbishop of Canterbury's radio attack on former King Edward and the company he kept has aroused the American colony in Britain's capital.

Members of the group of wealthy Americans who were Edward's friends are indignant and wondering if they are included in the "circle" referred to by the prelate.

It was this part of the archbishop's Sunday broadcast that raised the questions:

"It is even more strange and sad that he (Edward) should have sought his happiness * * * within a social circle whose standards and ways of life are alien to all the best instincts and traditions of his people.

"Let those who belong to this circle know today they stand rebuked by the judgment of a nation which had loved King Edward."

Edward's friends said there was no justification in Canterbury's indictment. They said the "King's set" did not deserve any castigation from the pulpit, much less the bitter attack of the archbishop.

Among American delegates to Mayfair, London's inner social group, there are many from Washington, America's greatest capital. Some of these have been excellent friends of Edward, but their friends say they don't qualify for the archbishop's "circle."

For one, there is Mrs. Ormond Lawson-Johnston, who was Mrs. Lyman Kendall, of Washington. There a famous golden-haired beauty, she came to Mayfair with a fortune from her deceased husband's estate.

In Washington, as Mrs. Kendall, she was a famous hostess, charming her guests with music. In London, she was equally in demand. She became an acquaintance of Edward and was frequently his guest at Fort Belvedere.

She and her second husband have a magnificent house in London. Edward has visited them. She is witty, clever and cultured, plays and sings for her guests and her husband is an American with British business connections.

And also with the Marchioness of Huntley, a dowager who formerly entertained lavishly in Washington as Mrs. James McDonald. Though she is well on in years, she still likes to entertain royalty and to be considered the King's friend. She is a multi-millionaire and a most popular hostess.

The son of the marchioness, Arthur Bradley Campbell, born of an earlier marriage, lives in London.

From Washington is Mrs. Lionel Atwill, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Oliver Cromwell. As the sparkling brunette Louise Cromwell she always dressed in exquisite smartness—a plain velvet dress, a string of pearls—or something simple. She was one of the most attractive belles in the history of Washington society.

Louise was introduced at a ball in Washington in a room transformed into an English garden with stars and moon, and so forth, achieved by electric lighting. She married Walter Brooks, of the Green Spring Valley set of Baltimore, Md., and afterwards divorced him to marry Gen. Douglas MacArthur. She divorced him,

Farmer Slain For Revenge, Gunman Says

Matthews Killed as He Pleaded With Murderer, Accomplice Avers.

Gangster Held in W. Va. Admits His Complicity; Two Hunted Here.

The murder of Elwood Matthews, prosperous 65-year-old Silver Spring, Md., farmer, was solved last night after a wounded gangster in Charleston, W. Va., calmly recited details of one of the most heartless crimes in Maryland crime annals.

The aged farmer was shot as he pleaded for mercy after he was thrown alive into the icy waters of Northwest Branch near Burnt Mills, Md., by the revenge-crazed brother of a Maryland convict.

W. Joseph Kirby, 22, confessed participation in the slaying and named William B. Reed and Lawrence Gingell as his accomplices.

Reed and Gingell were believed hiding in Washington. Last night a radio lookout for them was broadcast.

"These men are armed and will shoot," the broadaster warned. "Use every precaution in arresting them."

State's Attorney James Pugh, of Montgomery County, directed police in weaving a web of circumstantial evidence which prompted Kirby to talk freely in Charleston.

Accuses Reed of Shots.

Kirby said Reed, whose brother was sentenced to ten years in the Maryland Penitentiary following a trial two years ago in which Matthews testified for the State, fired the shots which killed the aged farmer.

"Reed, Gingell and I," Kirby's signed confession said, "went to the Indian Springs Country Club on the night of November 21 to steal some golf balls, but we could not find any.

"On our way home we passed Four Corners, Md., and Reed said: 'There's old man Matthews. He always has plenty of money and he's the —— that sent my brother to jail. I'll get even with him.'

"Reed told me to hold the old man up," Kirby's confession continued. "We hid by the side of the road until the old man came by and I stuck a .32 caliber gun on him. He screamed and threw some money on the road. Reed came up behind and hit him over the head with a Mauser revolver, knocking him down.

"We dragged the old man almost 2 miles through the woods—Reed said we were right near the Matthews farm—until we got to the creek. Gingell took the old man's suspenders and tied a rock around his neck with it and then Reed threw him in the water.

Begged for Help.

"The suspenders broke and the old man came to the surface screaming, 'Somebody please save me.'"

"I'll save you, you old ——, you sent my brother to jail," Reed shouted and fired two shots at Matthews.

"He sank out of sight then and didn't come up any more.

"We threw him into the water below the dam near a big rock."

"There was only $40 in the roll

Students Threaten Strike if Wisconsin Ousts Glenn Frank

By the Associated Press.

Madison, Wis., Dec. 14.—A group of University of Wisconsin students sounded out sentiment on the campus today for a general classroom walkout should President Glenn Frank be forced to resign.

"We believe we already have 2,000 to 3,000 students behind us, and the word is being spread around," said an anonymous spokesman. The university enrollment is more than 10,000.

A lecture by Prof. William H. Kiekhofer was interrupted by an impromptu student cheer for Dr. Frank.

A showdown in the dispute between Dr. Frank and a majority faction of the regents is expected when the board meets Wednesday to act on budget recommendations.

Dr. Frank found support from one regent in the latest of frequent controversies which have characterized his 11-year tenure.

Regent Gunnar Gundersen, of La Crosse, said that the secrecy surrounding the reported attempt by a progressive bloc of regents to oust the president "exists because the sordid mess will not stand or tolerate the light of day."

Negotiations Started For Release of Chiang; Russia Accuses Japan

Jewish Student Gets 18 Years For Slaying Swiss Nazi Chief

Son of Rabbi Declares Bullet Should Have Struck Hitler.

By the Associated Press.

Chur, Switzerland, Dec. 14.—David Frankfurter, 27-year-old Jewish medical student who said he wanted to assassinate Adolf Hitler, began an 18-year prison term tonight for killing Hitler's Nazi leader in Switzerland.

Actually he will have to serve 17 years and four months, for he was given credit for eight of ten months he has been held since he went to the home of Wilhelm Gustloff last February 4 and fired five bullets into the Nazi chief's head and neck.

The five judges who conducted the trial and convicted Frankfurter of premeditated murder ordered his expulsion from Switzerland at the end of his prison term.

Police quoted the young student, son of a rabbi in Yugoslavia, as shouting when he gave himself up: "My bullets should have struck Hitler himself, but I did what was within my power to avenge the sufferings of my fellow Jews in Germany."

At his trial he testified he once had thought of attempting to kill both Hitler and German Propaganda Minister Joseph Goebbels, but had decided such action might aggravate the position of Jews in Germany.

The slaying of Gustloff drew attention to the existence of the Nazi group in Switzerland, and the Swiss government banned the whole organization which Gustloff headed.

DAVID FRANKFURTER.

Berlin, Dec. 14 (AP).—Nazi Germany's intention to ferret out David Frankfurter's "backers, if any," was indicated in semiofficial comment today upon the Jewish medical student's conviction in Switzerland of the murder of Chancellor Hitler's Swiss leader, Wilhelm Gustloff. Press comment insisted that Frankfurter acted for others and charged "world Jewry" was responsible.

ChangDemands Nanking Give Him Colonies and Boost Army Pay.

Soviet Says Tokyo 'Inspired' Capture

Moscow Charges Effort to Divide China and Enslave People.

Far East Developments.

Negotiations were started for the release of Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek, held prisoner by Marshal Chang Hsueh-liang, former Manchurian war lord.

Soviet Russia charged that Japan, with its "imperialistic policy," inspired the capture of Chiang in a new effort "to enslave the great Chinese people."

Official moves in Tokyo indicated that the Japanese army may be prepared to intervene in the situation.

Tokyo announced that Japan is prepared to "exchange information" with Berlin, under terms of the German-Japanese joint declaration against communism, if events justify such action. If intervention comes, it was said, Japan would move to occupy additional North China areas with troops while Germany would let it be known that she would be prepared to prevent possible intervention on behalf of the Chinese Communists by Soviet Russia.

The official newspaper of the German foreign office accused the Communist International of responsibility for the seizure of Chiang.

Negotiations Opened.

By the United Press.

Peiping, (Tuesday), Dec. 15.—Negotiations have started in the ancient walled city of Sian-fu, capital of Shensi province, for the release of the kidnaped head of the Chinese national government in Nanking—Generalissimo Chiang Kai-Shek—it was announced officially today.

The negotiations are between W. L. Donald, gray-haired Australian newspaper correspondent, and Marshal Chang Hsueh-Liang, ousted Manchurian war lord.

Chiang has been a prisoner of the marshal since last week and will be killed unless his government accepts demands of the marshal for a greater voice in national affairs.

Officials here and in Nanking believed that a settlement can be reached.

Bargaining between Donald, a former adviser to Marshal Chang but now acting as an agent of the Nanking government, and Chang has been started and it was reported that Chang already has receded from his earlier demands, which included one for an immediate declaration of war against Japan in an effort to regain his former provinces in Manchuria.

Rebel's Proposals.

The marshal's new demands were said to be:

1. The assignment of certain "choice provinces" to the marshal and his followers as a new homeland and increased pay for the marshal's personal army from the national treasury.
2. No discrimination against the marshal or any of his followers because of their present rebellion and the kidnaping of Generalissimo Chiang.
3. Immediate cessation of the central government's campaign against the Chinese Communist

Buying Splurge Rockets Wheat To 7-Year High

Foreign Prospects Factor; Cotton and Corn Follow in General Rise.

General bullish factors, including reports of a shortage in Germany and an increased demand by Italy, plus probable short-holdings on December deliveries, yesterday pushed the price of wheat up from 5 to 8 cents a bushel, reaching the highest levels in 7 years.

Feverish speculative buying in Chicago, Liverpool, Minneapolis and other markets sent wheat futures for December delivery at Chicago to $1.35, with smaller gains in the quoted May and July. Corresponding gains were reported from Liverpool and Winnipeg, among the world's greatest grain centers.

Cotton Advances.

The advance in wheat prices was accompanied by an increase in other commodity prices on a broad front. Domestic copper, lead and zinc, according to the Associated Press, all reached new high prices since early in 1930. Copper for export sold at 10.90 cents a pound, a figure equaling the 1930 high, while domestic copper moved .5 cent a pound ahead to 11 cents. Cocoa for future delivery jumped more than one-third of a cent a pound and rubber futures advanced more than one-fourth of a cent a pound.

Cotton advanced moderately but was irregular at the close. From New Orleans, the United Press reported a market "squeeze" that has pushed the price of outstanding cotton up $50,000,000 in the last two weeks. This resulted from the approaching maturity of December contracts and the catching of "short" traders.

From Chicago a reported shortage of 37,000,000 bushels in the wheat crop was given as an important factor in the price jump but experts here did not agree that the shortage would play an important part.

Albert G. Black, chief of the Bureau of Agricultural Economics, was inclined to believe a shortage in South America's crop was more likely to have such an influence,

Nations League Plan Opposed At Peace Parley

American Court of Justice Also Appears Doomed at Buenos Aires.

By the Associated Press.

Buenos Aires, Dec. 14.—Proposals for an American League of Nations and an American Court of Justice appeared tonight to be doomed to the discard at the inter-American Peace Conference but a United States neutrality plan won strong support.

A majority of the members of a sub-committee which studied the league and court projects indicated their willingness to shelve the plans. They said they would support reports prepared by their chairman, Juan Antonio Buero of Uruguay, who urged that experts consider the plans and report to the regular Pan-American Conference at Lima, Peru, in 1938.

(The regular Pan-American parleys are held every five years. The last was at Montevideo, Uruguay, in 1933. The present inter-American conference for the maintenance of peace was organized at the suggestion of President Roosevelt in letters to heads of the other American Republics last January.)

Disapproved by U. S.

The United States delegation has indicated disapproval of the American court and American league plans. It has suggested inter-American co-operation for peaceful settlement of American troubles, however, and its neutrality proposal won the signatures of at least ten other groups today.

The neutrality project calls for consultation among American Republics if there is war within or outside America. The signatories also would consider prohibiting loans and the sale or shipment of war materials to belligerents, although they would not guarantee taking such measures in advance.

Supreme Court Orders Retrial On PWA Loans

Duke Case Is Sent Back to Lower Tribunals; Issue Left Wide Open.

By Robert C. Albright.

Leaving wide open the whole question of validity of PWA power loans and grants to municipalities, the United States Supreme Court yesterday ordered retrial in the lower courts of Duke Power Co.'s challenge of PWA power policies.

Lack of "orderly procedure," misunderstandings between lower tribunals, and records "improperly made up," were pointed to by the high court, in declining to rule at this time on the constitutional issues.

"Delusive interests of haste should not be permitted to obscure substantial requirement of orderly procedure," the jutices said.

In effect, the order plunged the whole question again into bitter litigation and indefinitely delayed a final decision on whether it is legal for PWA to advance money to communities for construction of

5 Plans to Rule Business Wait For Roosevelt

Proposals Include Revival of NRA, 30-Hour Week and Broad Powers.

By Felix Bruner.

When President Roosevelt returns to Washington tonight he will find in his famous wire basket, where repose proposals for things to do next, at least five major plans for the future regulation of business. Within the three weeks before Congress convenes he is expected to sift these proposals and, both members of Congress and businessmen hope, arrive at a program.

Many business leaders and business organizations have come to the conclusion that some new form of recognition is to be expected and the suggestion has been made that still another plan be worked out, the program of business itself.

The five major proposals thus far figuratively tossed into the wire basket are:

1. Virtual revival of the NRA, advocated by the Council for In-

Cuba's Senate Adopts Radical Constitution

Charter Would Nationalize Labor and Expropriate Private Property.

By the United Press.

Havana, Cuba, Dec. 14.—The Senate tonight adopted unanimously the draft of the new Cuban constitution, regarded as one of the most radical in the Americas.

It also approved appended legislation which provides for election of delegates to a constituent assembly to meet within six months to accept or reject the draft.

Socialistic and nationalistic in character, the constitution provides for expropriation of private property, social security and measures tending to break up large land holdings. Eventual complete nationalization of labor also is provided.

The Chamber of Deputies already has approved the draft, which grants equal rights to Cubans and foreign-

Gale Lashes Coast Of Britain; 17 Die, Ships Endangered

London, Dec. 14 (AP).—A furious gale lashed the British coast tonight, causing the death of 17 persons and endangering shipping.

Twelve of the 17 dead were on the little trawler Kodama.

Roaring in from the Atlantic at 70 miles an hour, the gale rolled mountainous waves upon the western coast. Many ships sent out distress signals. Others raced for shelter.

At Gorleston, Swanage, Bournemouth, Folkestone, Dover, Hythe and other points along the coast, lifeboats went to the rescue of distressed fishing smacks and other small craft.

The 5,000-ton steamer Zinal collided with the Newarp lightship in the North Sea. Other vessels ran ashore.

The 14,000-ton royal mail liner Highland Brigade ran aground in a mud bank near Tilbury, while coming up the Thames.

Early this evening the gale reached hurricane force.

Letters Praise Post's Drive To Provide Toys at Christmas

"May God bless you in your kind work."

This is the most-repeated line in the flood of letters that yesterday poured into The Washington Post Toy and Doll Fund. From mothers and fathers, from neighbors of distressed families and sometimes from the children themselves came appeals to the fund, and to kind-hearted Washingtonians, to make this Christmas reach every youngster in the District.

One letter came from a Southwest home, from a woman who hesitates to ask for charity. Her husband is employed part time, but the earnings are so meager there is nothing left for Christmas. Her three children, this year she feels, will have to forego any thought of a visit from Santa Claus.

But her letter closes with an appeal, not for herself, but for another family whose needs are even greater. This family of mother and father and six children were forgotten at Thanksgiving when they could afford no dinner. This Christmas sees them facing a future even more pathetic.

Another woman writes in to ask help for a mother, ill with tuberculosis, whose husband and son are suffering from the same disease. There are five children in the family. Christmas for them may mean only another cold and heartless day, another visit to their mother in the hospital. The letter closes . . . "so anything you may do for her she will be very grateful for—and Good bless you in your work."

Many Washingtonians have al-

Edith Maxwell's Young Sister Tells Her Story; Tears Come to Jurors' Eyes During Recital

By Edward T. Folliard.
A Staff Correspondent.

Wise, Va., Dec. 14.—Twelve-year-old Mary Catherine, Edith Maxwell's little sister with the golden curls, went on the stand late today and described the night of horror that ended in the death of Trigg Maxwell, her blacksmith father.

Edith, a 22-year-old mountain school teacher, is on trial for murdering Trigg, and Mary Catherine, talking the language of the Lonesome Pine country, told a story today that brought tears to the eyes of at least three of the jurors.

She told how Trigg, drunk and enraged because Edith stayed out late, said, "A man ought to break her —— neck."

She hated to use those bad words, Mary Catherine did, but she knew she had to. She told how, shortly after Edith returned home, she heard her beg "daddy" not to "stab me with that butcher knife." She told how her daddy was "a-cussing and a-quarreling," and how she and her mother got out of bed to see him holding Edith by the "hair of the head." The butcher knife had fallen to the floor by this time.

She didn't see Edith hit her father over the head with a slipper or any other weapon because by this time the quarrel had moved into another room.

She did hear her father say to her mother, "Anne, look what she's done to me."

And she told how her mother bathed the wound on his head, how he agreed to go to bed, saying he wasn't hurt; how Edith threatened to leave home and how her daddy, in a moment of remorse, pleaded with Edith not to leave.

Then she told how, about 40 minutes after the quarrel, her daddy got up, walked out to the kitchen and collapsed and died.

At this point, Mary Catherine burst into tears.

Charles Henry Smith, of Alexandria, who was engaged by The Post to defend Edith, said to her:

"Now don't cry, honey. You just go ahead and tell what happened."

But Mary Catherine couldn't stop.

Edith started crying, too, and the eyes of some of the jurors began to cloud. These jurors are somewhat different from the 12 mountaineers who, at Edith's first trial, found her guilty of first-degree murder and sentenced her to 25 years in the penitentiary, thereby causing readers of The Post to raise a defense fund to get her a new trial.

Little Mary Catherine made an

Italy's King Is Ill With Flu in Rome

Rome (Tuesday), Dec. 15 (AP).—King Victor Emmanuel was reported early today by usually well-informed sources to be ill in bed with influenza.

These sources said the King, who is 67, became ill three days ago. Influenza has been prevalent in Rome for the past few weeks.

They said he had fought against the influenza for two days, but went to bed yesterday after consulting palace physicians.

He was reported to be uncomfortable, but not in a serious condition.

TVA Restrained.

Meantime, on another front, 19 private utilities yesterday in Nashville, Tenn., succeeded in enjoining the vast TVA power program from "further expansion or extension of activities" until constitutionality of TVA Tennessee Valley operations can be determined.

The TVA restraining order was signed by Federal Judge John L. Gore, once a law partner of Secretary of State Cordell Hull. Although not tied into the PWA litigation, the Gore order will prevent further expansion of TVA in the valley area, until validity is decided by Gore in a separate hearing now scheduled for March 8.

Following the Supreme Court's PWA order, Secretary of Interior Harold Ickes, in a statement here, indicated the PWA program will go forward, although hampered by lawsuits.

"The result of this technical decision," said Ickes, "will mean further delay in construction of some half hundred PWA power projects, in the event that private power interests persist in dilatory tactics.

"My view is that the Public Works Administration should adhere to its policy of preserving and protecting allotments made for those projects despite the litigation which remains unresolved."

Another Supreme Court decision, touching the long-standing controversy over radio use of press association news, ordered dismissal of a suit in which the Associated Press sought to enjoin Radio Station KVOS of Bellingham, Wash. from broadcasting news published by A. P. members. The court held A. P. failed to prove $3,000 in damages—the amount necessary to give Federal courts jurisdiction. Presumably, A. P. may institute further action to prove its claim.

Decisions in Abeyance.

Supreme Court decisions on several pending New Deal cases were held in abeyance. Early in the day, an effort to obtain reconsideration of the 4-to-4 ruling by which the justices recently upheld the New York unemployment insurance law was made in a brief presented by E. C. Stearns & Co., W. H. Chamberlin, Inc., and Associated Industries of New York State. The brief said "affirmances by an equally divided court in these cases leave unsettled and uncertain grave questions of constitutional law of pressing public concern." Although not immediately involving the social security act, which the New York law supplements, the recent ruling by implication was considered an augury of how the court might rule on a test of the Federal law.

In sending the Duke Power Co.'s PWA suit back to the lower courts, the Supreme Court said it expressed "no opinion on the relevancy or effect of the evidence, or otherwise upon the merits."

Technically, the justices reversed the finding by the Circuit Court of Appeals, at Charlotte, N. C., that PWA has constitutional authority to make loans and grants to municipalities desiring to construct their own power systems. Permission was granted both the Government and PWA to "amend their pleadings in the light of the existing facts" and to obtain a retrial in the Western South Carolina Federal District Court. The District Court originally declared the PWA program unconstitutional.

Opinion on Procedure.

Explaining the procedural mix-up, the court said:

"The appellate court failed to make its ruling with proper clarity and definiteness. For that reason the district court failed to understand the essential purport of the order to remand. The district court did not understand that it was revested with complete jurisdiction and its proceedings were not taken and its decision was not rendered with a consciousness of its power and its duty."

Contending that interests of speed should not interfere with proper procedure, the court said "there is no exigency here which demands that these requirements should not be inforced."

The suit was brought by Duke Power Co. to prevent a $2,852,000 PWA loan and grant to Greenwood County, S. C., to build an electric plant at Buzzard Roost. Some 51 similar cases are pending in lower courts, involving about $50,089,891 in loans and grants in 23 States. Altogether, the PWA has made about 257 allotments for power projects. Some 63 are involved in litigation.

Eighty-five of the PWA projects are completed and in operation, many of them never involved in litigation, and 97 are under construction.

Disappointment that yesterday's ruling did not settle once and for all the constitutional issue was expressed by Attorney General Cummings.

Judge Gore's restraining order against TVA's power "yardstick" program, issued in Nashville yesterday, would prohibit further solicitation of municipalities as consumers of TVA-generated power, and maintain TVA virtually at its August 20 status.

Supplements Other Suit.

The injunction suit was filed by the utilities supplementary to their larger suit to invalidate the entire PWA program.

During three weeks of arguments on the restraining move, TVA contended an injunction order would precipitate an unemployment crisis, cause breach of contract and materially damage small co-operative consumer companies.

Judge Gore said his order will not affect TVA projects already under construction and will not disturb "necessary" contracts providing for additional energy for consumers now under TVA contract.

Other court action:

By a 6-to-2 vote, held unconstitutional provision of the Massachusetts "succession tax" law, which levied assessments on beneficiaries of trusts made before the law passed in 1907.

Wallace 'Hints' Disillusionment About Europe; May Prove Blow to Hull Trade Pacts.

By Franklyn Waltman

IN the excitement last week over l'affaire Simpson, an interesting, if not significant, address by Secretary of Agriculture Henry A. Wallace before the American Farm Bureau Federation at Pasadena was generally overlooked. For the most part it dealt with world peace and foreign trade and the part of agriculture in the latter.

WALTMAN.

Contending he wished to point out a contribution which the farmers of the United States can make to world peace, Mr. Wallace cited their deep-seated hatred of war and also their advocacy of highly nationalistic trading policies which inevitably lead to war.

The Secretary pointed out realistically that "the danger of the United States getting into a serious war comes from the fact that we export goods to Europe and when war comes one side or the other interferes with that trade." Consequently, the farmers of the country, disillusioned, as Mr. Wallace said, over Europe and the League of Nations, "have urged that we withdraw as much as possible from Europe and Asia."

As a compromise between the nationalistic isolation urged on the Nation by its farm community and still performing some of the world's washing through international trade, Mr. Wallace proposed what might be termed a policy of regional isolation—that is, he wants efforts exerted chiefly for the development of trade among the countries of the Western Hemisphere.

Mr. Wallace spoke cautiously and made no flat proposals. Rather he projected a suggestion before the chief farm organization in the country. He assumed that the American farmers would "like the idea of increasing co-operation among the American republic" because the American Institute of Public Opinion some days ago reported that 63 per cent of the farmers favor a Pan-American League—a higher percentage than any other class.

The Secretary of Agriculture, however, warned farmers that they "should count the cost and be willing to pay a small part of it." He was referring to the fact that the farmers must be willing to accept what he termed "small increases in the imports of certain agricultural products."

"In the cause of peace," he asserted, "the farmers of the United States must learn to say 'yes' as often as possible to agricultural imports from Pan America while at the same time reserving the right to say 'no,' when any vital branch of agriculture is likely to be menaced by too great imports."

He added that "both our hearts and our heads lead us increasingly to Pan America, but the facts are stubborn and of necessity can be brought into line with our desires only slowly."

Perhaps Secretary Wallace's remarks were inspired by nothing more than a desire to give some support to his brother Cabinet officer, Secretary of State Cordell Hull, and the President in their efforts to weld a closer bond of co-operation between the United States and its sister republics. Perhaps he used his remarks about developing trade chiefly with Pan America as subtle window dressing to remind American farmers that trade cannot be one-way traffic, that we must be willing to accept imports—and imports of farm products—if we expect to sell abroad.

On the other hand, it is feared in some quarters that Mr. Wallace's remarks reflected a feeling of disillusionment about Europe which has overwhelmed him. If that be true, he has been transformed into one of the stanchest supporters of the necessity for stimulating world-wide trade into an advocate of what amounts to economic isolation—and that is a serious blow to the Hull reciprocal trade program and its objectives.

Secretary Wallace's plan is one for economic isolation precisely because it is premature and impractical today, and if put into effect would lead there. This hemisphere is too limited a market at this time to provide the foreign trade which this country should have, and because Latin America and Canada, as Mr. Wallace pointed out, produce chiefly agricultural products, it is not susceptible to enlargement in the near future.

Last year, 68 per cent of American agricultural exports went to five countries, which, as Mr. Wallace said, "are certain to be involved in any major difficulty in Europe and Asia," and only 10 per cent went to Pan America.

That means if the Wallace idea of ignoring Europe and Asia is carried out that the American farmer will lose a good part of the foreign markets he now has and in addition he would be confronted by competitive imports from Latin America and Canada. Unless the American door were opened to such imports it is difficult to see how this country could make much progress in expanding its sales of industrial products to them.

Just where Secretary Wallace expects to go with such a proposal is difficult to see. It springs from a noble desire to keep this country out of another European war. But at the same time it may have the effect of strengthening resistance in the farm belt against further reciprocal agreements with European countries and thus defeat a program which has for one of its major objectives diminishing the pressure which makes for war.

Whether we like it or not, this country economically needs Europe for a few years more and the best way to keep this country out of another World War is to do what can be done to prevent that war without involving ourselves should it come. The alternative is a regimented economic isolation.

5 Major Plans For Business Wait Roosevelt

President May Formulate Regulatory Program After Study.

dustrial Progress, headed by Maj. George L. Berry.

2. Provision for State compacts, eliminating broad Federal regulation, suggested by the Chamber of Commerce of the United States.

3. A Federal incorporation law, giving the Government general regulatory powers over business engaged in interstate commerce, proposed by Senator O'Mahoney (Democrat), Wyoming, and Senator Borah (Republican), Idaho.

4. Strengthening of the powers of the Federal Trade Commission to bring about enforcement of its orders.

5. The program of labor, including the 30-hour week, maximum wage provisions and elimination of child labor.

Finally, there is the suggestion of a constitutional amendment to remove the possibility of illegality from any and all of these proposals.

Co-operation Is Talked.

Business men have been talking co-operation. At the recent meeting of the National Association of Manufacturers it was agreed that there should be such co-operation and the resolutions there adopted took on a much more conciliatory tone than they have in past years. But recently there has been the suggestion from some business sources that there must be a concerted program on which to co-operate. The question that business would like to have answered is what this program should be and what would be the minimum that President Roosevelt would accept. Industrial leaders are hoping that there can be a compromise between extremes of regulation and extreme opposition to any kind of regulation.

For instance, it is generally conceded that business has accepted the New Deal social security legislation and the New Deal banking law. Still unsatisfactory to commercial and business interests are the Walsh-Healey law—as evidenced by the recent failure of the Navy to obtain bids for copper—, the Robinson-Patman law, and the labor relations act. All three of these laws are expected to be contested before the Supreme Court

30-Hour Week Trading Basis.

President Roosevelt is reported never to have looked with favor upon labor's proposal for 30-hour-week legislation. From the point of view of business this is one of the most extreme of the proposals and many doubt whether labor leaders really expect or even wish to have it enacted. Rather, it is looked upon as a trading basis for the purpose of scaring the timid into some form of regulatory legislation.

More in line with what labor hopes to obtain are the proposals of the Council for Industrial Progress, about half of the members of which represent labor, and the O'Mahoney proposal for a Federal incorporation law.

The act would set up an administrative body for the enforcement of specific provisions against unfair competition, child labor and low labor standards. The way would be left open for voluntary trade agreements, thus overlapping to some extent the activities of the Federal Trade Commission. The proposal, in fact, suggests that the enforcement of the law might be placed in the hands of the commission.

F. T. C. Points to Progress.

The Federal Trade Commission in its annual report released Monday makes much of its trade practice conferences and points to considerable progress in the adoption of voluntary agreements. The commission recommend a considerable strengthening of the law under which it operates. Under the present law it is directed to prevent "unfair or deceptive acts and practices in commerce." It suggested that such acts be made specifically illegal.

The commission asked that the law "affirmatively provide that court review may be obtained by the commission without first proving an order has been violated and that upon affirmance the court shall issue its own decree commanding obedience to the commission's order. The commission also renews its recommendation that its orders shall become final and conclusive and violation thereof punishable as a contempt of court if a respondent does not apply for court review within 60 days after the order is issued."

The proposed Federal incorporation law is based upon the interstate commerce clause in the Constitution. O'Mahoney and Borah are taking somewhat separate approaches. Borah would primarily eliminate and prevent monopolies. O'Mahoney would go further and write labor provisions, including many of the provisions of the National labor relations act, into the law.

Proposal Most Sweeping.

Under the O'Mahoney bill business would be licensed and licenses revoked for violations. Enforcement would be under a new bureau to be known as the Bureau of Corporations. The O'Mahoney proposal is one of the most sweeping of all those that have been suggested.

The Chamber of Commerce proposals include adoption of rules of fair competition by industries and concentration of the Federal Trade Commission upon elimination of unfair practices.

In a recent committee report on State compacts it was explained that such agreements would be within the powers reserved to the States by the Constitution. Possible subjects for compacts mentioned by the chamber committee include labor legislation, electric utility regulation, milk production and natural resources, including bituminous coal and competitive fuels and timber and corporate charters.

conference began, told a committee:

"The good people cannot limit their defenses while the bad people arm."

He spoke before a group which postponed consideration of a Chilean recommendation for bilateral arms limitation pacts and a Uruguayan recommendation to condemn the bombing of cities and the use of gas and bacteria in warfare.

Gen. Moncada asserted that when the United States "with humanitarian aims" intervened in Nicaragua, part of the people disarmed, but that part was the "good part." The "bad part," he declared, kept its arms, and four years of conflict ensued.

That situation, said the former Nicaraguan president, illustrated that regional disarmament was not feasible.

A full session of the conference which had been scheduled for tomorrow was postponed until Wednesday, when leaders hoped to have ready for final approval the United States neutrality project, as well as nonintervention and peace proposals.

The latter two were jointly sponsored by all 21 republics represented at the parley. The nonintervention resolution reiterates the principle of noninterference by one nation in the internal affairs of another and provides for joint consultation if intervention appears necessary.

Layman Blames Spain Leftists In Civil Strife

Foundation for Conflict Rests in Constitution, Churchmen Told.

Foundation for the conflict in Spain between the Catholics and the present government is embodied in the constitution of the Spanish Republic, and "the acts of those who have exercised authority under that constitution," William F. Montavan, internationally known Catholic layman, asserted last night in an address in the Church of the Immaculate Conception.

"On December 21, 1931," said Montavan, a former commercial attache at Lima, Peru, and director of the legal department of the National Catholic Welfare Council, "when the constitution was enacted, the Bishop of Spain, after deliberation and after consulting secular authorities, addressed a joint pastoral to the Spanish Nation.

"The Bishop and the clergy protested against certain provisions of the constitution, which they held to be as 'unjust as they are unnecessary.'

Road to Parley Closed.

"Particularly they expressed regret that the way had been closed for amicable negotiations, as they felt most of the difficulties could be removed by men of good will, meeting in conference."

Montavan asserted that, at the time the pastoral was issued, the work proper to a constitutional assembly had been completed, and the assembly would not meet the challenge.

He referred particularly to the oppression of the church and the syndicalist tendancies of the Spanish government following flight of King Alphonso into exile. These conditions, he added, became gradually worse.

"We were never influenced toward any innovation of a purely political type introduced into Spain," Montavan pointed out.

Sought to Keep Rights.

"Everyone knows that the Catholic Church never prefers one form of government over another. All the Catholic Church demands is that, whatever the form of government, the rights of God and conscience be preserved."

Montavan said that the trouble preceding the rebellion was brought about fundamentally because the Leftists in power had been tyrannical and abused their authority.

"One of the first acts of the Cortes after its organization," declared he, "was to depose President Alcala Zamora, whose moderation made him inaccepatble to the Popular Front."

According to Montavan, the Popular Front in reality "is a conspiracy based on a pact entered into by Leftist leaders."

Assassination Recalled.

He described the assassination of the Rightist leader, Calvo Sotelo, who was taken from his home and his wife by men in uniform, thinking he was under the government's protection.

His body was found next day, Montavan recalled, and his murder did as much as anything to ignite the spark of civil war.

"A third international has been active in Spain," concluded Montavan, who has been made a Knight of St. Gregory by Pope Pius XI.

"Certainly it is no less active than Italian fascism or German national socialism. If unchecked, these foreign influences will prevent the Spanish people from reaching freely a sound decision in a matter of domestic concern."

George Washington Relatives Will Buy New Stamp Today

Eleanor Washington Howard, 80-year-old great-great-grandniece of George Washington, and last member of the Washington family to be born at Mount Vernon, will buy a steel engraving of her illustrious ancestor for 1 cent today.

The "catch" to it, of course, is that anybody else can do the same thing tomorrow, for the portrait is on a new postage stamp.

Mrs. Howard will make her purchase in a ceremony at the postoffice, where she will buy a sheet of each of two new 1-cent stamps.

On one will be the portraits of Army heroes—Washington and Nathanael Greene. The other will carry portraits of John Paul Jones and John Barry.

too, long before he rose to be chief of staff of the United States Army.

Married Film Star.

The young divorcee, famed for her amusing stories, next married Lionel Atwill, the cinema actor. She has divided her time between America and this country ever since.

Mrs. Atwill is among the people Mrs. Wallis Simpson knew when she lived in Washington.

Mrs. Drummond Wolf a Leader.

Mrs. Henry Drummond Wolf, a young matron, belongs to the very fashionable set in London. Conservative, well-bred, willowy, she was the best dancer in Washington when she was Miss Margaret Fahnestock, daughter of Mrs. Gibson Fahnestock and related to many of the First Families of Virginia and Maryland.

Mrs. Wolf has been married three times. After her debut in Washington, she married Sylvanus Stoles, of Washington, whom she divorced. Later she married Lieut. Benjamin Holcomb, of the United States Navy, who died. Five or six years ago she married Drummond Wolf, an Englishman, and has lived in London ever since, startling Mayfair with her striking costumes.

Mrs. Jacques A. Raffray, almost a dead ringer for Mrs. Simpson, but more blonde in coloring, a bridesmaid at the latter's marriage to Lieut. Winfield Spencer, United States Navy, in 1916, and now mentioned as Ernest Simpson's bride-to-be, is another Washington-Londoner.

Mrs. Raffray is a member of the famous Kirk family, of Baltimore, important in Maryland for generations. Mary Raffray has visited Mrs. Simpson many times in London since the Baltimorean's marriage to Simpson and has been on some of the pleasure jaunts she took with Edward. She has an apartment in London now and is a friend of Edward.

Tallulah Bankhead in U. S.

Miss Tallulah Bankhead, motion-picture actress raised in the Congressional set in Washington, was a member of the Prince of Wales crowd when she lived in London—but definitely, "Talue," as she is called, with her deep-sunken eyes and tawny long bobbed locks, has been out of the Mayfair picture for some time, however, being involved with theatrical matters in Manhattan.

Mrs. Harry W. Brown, a multi-millionaire dowager from Pittsburgh, takes a house in London every season and entertains the most important personages at brilliant parties. She has often had King Edward as a guest and other members of the royal family.

When this bountiful lady was presented to court about ten years ago, Mrs. George Barnett, of Washington, a cousin of Wallis Simpson, was a guest at her London house and was presented to the King at the time. Mrs. Brown always entertains in Washington, New York and Palm Beach some time during the season. Mrs. Barnett is frequently her guest.

Another American woman well known in London society is the Countess of Berkeley, who lives with her husband in one of the most historic castles in England. The countess was formerly Miss Mary Lowell of the Lowells of Massachusetts. It is reported the King and Wally soon may move into her Italian villa.

Former Miss Gordon.

A Baltimore woman is Mrs. Keppel-Palmer, wife of an Englishman in London. She was Miss Virginia Gordon, daughter of Mrs. Alexander Gordon, of Baltimore, who has remarried. She is related to Mrs. Simpson, and was a guest at a luncheon party given by Mrs. Barnett, of Washington, for Miss Wallis Warfield the day before her marriage to Lieut. Spencer. Extremely tall, slender, her hair drawn back in Junoesque simplicity, she is a world-traveled and popular hostess in London.

Miss Caroline Nash, the daughter of Capt. Frances Nash, U. S. N., retired, and Mrs. Nash, is among the many American expatriates who live in Europe and return only to this country for visits.

Lady Furness, twin sister of Gloria Morgan Vanderbilt, of New York, who once was a close friend of Mrs. Simpson and who is said to have introduced her to the king, lives in London. Lady Furness, black-haired and svelte, gave to Mrs. Simpson the crystal gazing ball into which guests peeped at the latter's London town house.

Often attending London social events are Prince and Princess Christian of Hesse. The princess was formerly Miss Elizabeth Reid Rogers, of Washington. She made her debut here. Prince and princess live a part of each year in Paris and are members of the group there in which many smart Americans move.

Federal Employes To Map Program

The executive council of the National Federation of Federal Employes will meet today with representatives of the National Legislative Council of Federal Employe Organizations to work out plans for concerted legislative action at the next Congress.

The N. F. F. E. executive council also will draw up statements today for legislative improvement on the questions of the merit system and classification, retirement and the shorter work-week.

Committees appointed yesterday by President Luther C. Steward to draft these statements consist of: For merit and classification, Dr. Walter P. Taylor, George L. Evans and Vaux Owen; for retirement, Ulrey J. Biller, John Fitzgerald and Charles L. Wiegand; for the shorter work-week, William M. Rapsher, Arthur Joachims and Lee R. Whitney.

Other organizations affiliated with the National Legislative Council of Federal Employe Organizations are the United National Association of Postoffice Clerks, National Rural Letter Carriers Association, National Association of Postoffice Laborers.

Tax Fraud Action Dropped by U. S.

Prosecution of two former Government employes who were under indictment on charges of conspiring to defraud the Government in connection with a proposed income tax assessment was ended in District Court yesterday when Guy S. Burtis, a former NRA employe, pleaded "nolo contendere." A co-defendant Warren L. Heap, one-time assistant reviewer in the Internal Revenue Bureau, previously had entered a similar plea and had been placed on probation.

Both men were indicted for an alleged conspiracy revolving around their attempts to advise W. A. Ellis, president of the Amer Mining Co., of Denver, Colo., concerning an assessment of $208,000 for the fiscal year 1932.

Neither defendant ever got in touch with Ellis and George E. McNeill, assistant United States Attorney, said that the alleged conspiracy did not involve the passing of any money.

16 Are Injured In Strike Riots At Two Plants

Ocean Deadlock Holding; Owners Put Losses at 311 Millions in Tie-up.

By the Associated Press.

Labor disputants resorted to fists and stones in two widely separated cities yesterday while others sought to end strikes through conciliation.

Fourteen persons were injured in a clash between strike pickets and workers at the Berkshire Knitting Mills at Reading, Pa. Policemen routed them with tear gas.

Two men were bruised by rocks hurled at the John Morrell & Co. packing plant at Sioux Falls, S. Dak.

Representatives of sailors and employers reported progress in their efforts to reach an understanding on control of hiring halls—crucial issue in the Pacific Coast maritime strike. Shippers estimated the 46-day controversy had cost shipping and business interests more than $311,000,000. At Newark, Harry R. Bridges, West Coast district president of the International Longshoremen's Association, said he had little hope of an immediate settlement.

New Strikes Called.

New "sit down" strikes were called in two plants of the Kelsey-Hayes Wheel Co. at Detroit. More than 600 employes continued their "sit down" strike at an Aluminum Co. of America factory at Detroit, but Federal Conciliator E. C. McDonald predicted a nine-day strike at the Gordon Baking Co. in the same city would be terminated by tomorrow.

Bus Drivers Return.

About 50 striking bus drivers voted to return to duty with the Eastern Michigan System but Flint bus drivers rejected peace proposals.

Officials of the Libbey-Owens-Ford Glass Co. conferred with leaders of the Federation of Flat Glass Workers at Cleveland concerning a new contract to replace the agreement expiring tomorrow.

Approximately 1,200 men were idle in a miners strike at Park City, Utah. At Chester, Pa., the Sun Shipbuilding & Drydock Co. said more than 3,000 of the 4,500 workers affected by a strike had gone back to work.

Cuba's Senate Adopts Radical Constitution

ers "except in the limitations imposed relative to labor." One article proclaims labor as a "right, subject to the protection of the state," and adds that "in the benefits of labor, Cubans will have preference."

Another article declares "the State, at any time for reasons of social interest and through previous indemnization, may expropriate land and private enterprises susceptible of being nationalized."

Measures by which such indemnization is to be effected are omitted.

Strike Right Recognized.

Under the constitution, the state would be "obliged progressively to expropriate lands of foreign or national foundations that exceed the volume actually necessary for normal maintenance of the industries already established thereon, or of uncultivated property."

The "right to strike and of lockout" is recognized and there is provision for state jurisdiction over labor, charged with settling conflicts between workers and owners.

Other clauses oblige employers and employes to contribute to social security funds.

The chamber was suspended due to a "disorder" when a small group of coalition representatives sought to impede discussion of the Senate's 9-cent sugar tax law.

Supporters of Gomez.

The group apparently supports President Gomez in opposing the law, which would give the army an additional $2,000,000 annually.

Col. Fulgencio Batista, army chief of staff, yesterday summoned military district commanders and other high army officials to Guane, Pinar del Rio Province, for a mysterious conference. Gen. Rafael Montalvo, secretary of national defense, was present at the meeting.

Congressmen supporting the President conferred with him at the palace today, the entire situation indicating a serious divergence between the army and the administration. While everything is orderly and undisturbed on the surface, rumors, such as have not been current since Provisional President Carlos Mendieta's administration, have not been circulating in Havana the last few days. Much street talk has been heard regarding a possible army coup.

Kidnaped Chinese General and Wife

Copyright by the Associated Press.

Gen. Chiang Kai-shek, "strong man" of the Nanking government who was kidnaped by mutinous troops as startegic move to force war with Japan, pictured with his wife, a graduate of America's Wellesley College. Mrs. Kai-shek, was reported to have left by airplane shortly after the kidnaping was made known. It is believed she was trying to negotiate for his release.

armies in Kansu province and elsewhere.

4. A stronger anti-Japanese program by the central government.

The first point was believed to be the only one of real importance and Chinese admitted that the generalissimo and his associates in Nanking probably will be forced to yield, as Marshal Chang literally holds a pistol against the heads of Chiang and some of his most powerful generals—who were seized with him—and unquestionably will shoot if his demands are rejected.

It was anticipated that Marshal Chang would put a time limit on the negotiations and would demand that Nanking withdraw troops, which today were massing around Sian-fu for an attack in force in event Generalissimo Chiang is injured.

Chiang Not Harmed.

It was certain that Chiang so far has not been hurt and is being well treated.

Gen. Sung Cheh-Yuan, chairman of the Hopei-Charar political council, received a personal message from Marshal Chang assuring him of the prisoner's safety and the generalissimo even was permitted to radio his American-educated wife, the former Meiling Soong, in Nanking, that he was well.

Donald and Col. J. L. Huang, a Nanking officer, flew to Sian-fu from Loyang in Marshal Chang's personal airplane, which was sent for them. They were expected to fly back to Nanking soon to convey Chang's terms to the central government.

Pamphlets Dropped.

Thirty Nanking war planes flew over Sian-fu today, dropping leaflets demanding the immediate removal of Generalissimo Chiang to "a safe place." It was a futile demonstration, however, for the air force obviously dared not attack Marshal Chang so long as he has the most powerful figure in the Nanking government in his hands.

Meanwhile, official moves in Tokyo indicated that the Japanese army, which for months has been increasing its sphere of influence in North China, may be prepared to intervene in the situation.

Tokyo, it was announced, is prepared to "exchange information" with Berlin, under terms of the German-Japanese joint declaration against communism, if events justify such action.

If intervention comes, it was said, Japan would move to occupy additional North China areas with troops while Germany would let it be known that she would be prepared to prevent possible intervention on behalf of the Chinese Communists by Soviet Russia.

Soviet Accuses Japan.

Moscow, Dec. 14 (AP).—Communist Russia charged today Japan, with its "imperialistic policy," inspired the capture of Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek in a new effort to "enslave the great Chinese people."

But "the Chinese masses will not permit this move," the authoritative newspaper Pravda asserted in vigorous denial that Russia was involved in Marshal Chang's rebellion against the Nationalist Chinese government, in answer to Japanese charges that the revolt was an effort to spread communism.

"Japanese imperialism systematically works to divide a country into small units incapable of united resistance," Pravda counter-charged.

"In this case, Japanese provocateurs will not be able to hide the traces of their clumsy work. The policy of creating 'independent governments' and puppet states which are set up by the Japanese in order to ruin China are strange to our foreign policy."

Will "Open China's Eyes."

Also, the newspaper asserted, "the imperialistic policy of Tokyo's aggressors will once more open the eyes of the Chinese masses to the intentions of Tokyo to further enslave the great Chinese people.

"The Soviet government remains devoted to its policy of strict non-intervention in foreign states."

The newspaper Isvestia said:

"Chang's action can disrupt the unification of the anti-Japanese forces in China. It represents a danger not only for the Nanking government, but for all China as well. Although Chang came out under an anti-Japanese banner, this action in the present situation is objectively advantageous only for Japanese imperialism. Inasmuch as the Nanking government's policy is to conduct resistance against Japanese aggression through a popular front struggle against Japan, the action of Chang is regarded by all its participants not as a front with Nanking, but as a front against Nanking.

"The most immediate result of such an action can be a civil war which Japanese imperialism will hastily use for further aggressive action against China. Chang's outbreak is appraised by Japanese imperialism from this very viewpoint. It is not without reason that it was accompanied by a provocative version alleging that 'Chang's government is supported by the U. S. S. R.,' which allegedly concluded a defensive and offensive alliance with him.

"This obviously false information was circulated by Japanese sources almost simultaneously with the first reports of Chang's outbreak. The Chinese people will find their way in this tangle of Japanese militarist intrigue. The best thing that can be wished to China is the quickest and most peaceful liquidation of the outbreak so obviously opposed to the interests of that great country."

Berlin, Dec. 14 (AP).—The Deutsche Diplomatische Politische Korrespondenz, mouthpiece of the German foreign office, accused the Communist International today of responsibility for the arrest of Generalissimo Chiang Kais-shek, leader of the central Chinese government.

"What has happened in China," the publication said, "is new proof that the warnings (German allegations of communistic activity abroad) and are founded not on ideological animosities, buo on realities."

Madrid Repels Fascists' Tanks In 2-Hour Fight

Evacuation of Citizens Is Sped; Cabinet Resigns at Barcelona.

By the Associated Press.

Madrid, Dec. 14.—Fascist tanks smashed at Madrid suburbs to no avail today as militia defenders hastened transfer of women and children from the wind-swept and hungry Spanish Capital.

Meanwhile at Barcelona Premier Jose Tarradellas and his cabinet resigned because, Tarradellas said, they could not control anarchist and extreme labor factions.

Luis Companys, president of the autonomous Catalonian State, announced he would begin work immediately with all anti-Fascist parties and workers' organizations in an effort to form a new government.

The decision, he said, "will be dependent upon whether the new government to be formed would really govern."

Tarradellas, in disclosing Saturday that his cabinet planned to quit, declared he would not accept further responsibility for "the action of irresponsible, uncontrolled groups."

The Lloyd's signal station at Gibralter reorted tonight the British steamer British Isles sent word that an unidentified Russian steamer was afire in the Mediterranean southeast of Cartagena and that the crew apparntly had been picked up by a Spanish warship.

Officials at Madrid said 60,000 men, women and children were escorted to warmer and safer areas during the last week. Of these 30,000 were children.

Thus far, about 300,000 citizens have been evacuated from the besieged city, open to Fascist air bombardment, lacking food and fuel, and swept by icy winds from the Guadarrama mountains of the northwest. An estimated 200,000 remained, awaiting transportation to the southland.

Convinced the siege will last throughout the winter, the defense junta today took advantage of the comparative lull in fighting to reorganize defense lines and drafted efforts to enforce strictest discipline among the militia units.

The insurgent tanks rumbled into northwestern University City and charged at government lines for two hours today, before beating a retreat.

The Madrid defenses stood steady—for more than two months the Fascists have been unable to force their way past the University City section and into the heart of the capital, although aerial attacks have caused vast damage to much of the city.

Tokyo Leaders Linked to Plot, Military Revolt

Kuhara, Former Minister, Freed After 10 Months' Confinement.

By the Associated Press.

Tokyo (Tuesday), Dec. 15.—Strong intimation that men of national reputation were connected with the sensational Tokyo military rebellion of last February 26-29 was given today by the war office.

An announcement said a special court-martial had released Fusanosuke Kuhara, former minister of communications and wealthy industrialist, who, it was revealed, had been in prison nearly ten months.

The war office said the court found insufficient evidence to convict Kuhara on the charges on which the military authorities had held him, but his case was taken in hand immediately by civil courts.

There will be further investigation on accusations of shielding men involved in the rising and of being an accessory before the fact.

This was the first official intimation Kuhara has been under suspicion, although he simply dropped from sight after the February revolt and it was widely believed that he was deained for investigation of his part therein.

The name of Gen. Jinzaburo Mazaki, former inspector general of military education, also appeared prominently in the court-martial's report, which said the rebels planned to make him premier of a military government.

Electors Cast Official Votes For President

First Batch Arrives in Capital by Airplane; Others on Way.

By the Associated Press.

By rail and air, the official ballots cast yesterday by 531 Presidential electors traveled to the Capital for official counting long weeks after the country's popular vote had re-elected President Roosevelt.

The electoral ballots from at least one State actually reached Washington last night, when Pennsylvania's 36 votes were deposited in the Postoffice here. Carl Becktol, of McKeesport, one of the electors, came with them by plane.

Barring the almost unprecedented failure of electors to vote in accordance with the popular ballot that selected them, President Roosevelt should have received 523 electoral votes to eight for the Republican nominee, Gov. Alf M. Landon of Kansas.

Rhode Island Late.

Rhode Island's electors cast their ballots three hours late, after waiting for certification by the State Board of Vote Tabulation. A court contest in a local case delayed matters.

Nebraska's seven electors voted, but then found that they would not immediately get their $5 allowance and travel fee—trouble over State funds causing that hitch.

Nevada's three electors met and voted, although not yet elected officially themselves. Not until Monday will the Supreme Court of that State meet and canvass the November general election votes officially to declare the electors elected.

Maine and Vermont electors met to vote in the only two States which cast a popular vote plurality for the Republican nominee.

Official Totals.

Meanwhile, the final official count of the total vote in the Presidential election was shown to be 45,814,377.

The count was completed yesterday when announcement of Rhode Island's official vote added 2,222 to its unofficial tally.

The record-breaking total was cast as follows:

Roosevelt	27,752,309
Landon	16,682,524
Others	1,379,565
Rosevelt's plurality	11,069,785

The flures certified by election officials in every State included the following minor party votes:

Lemke (Union Party)	892,793
Thomas (Socialist)	187,342
Browder (Communist)	80,096
Colvin (Prohibitionist)	37,609
Aiken (Social-Laborite)	12,793
Scattering and void	168,911

Taxi Driver Held On Robbery Charge

John C. Thomason, 30, 1718 Seventeenth street northwest, a taxi driver, was arrested on charges of assault and battery and robbery last night by Bethesda police.

Thomason is charged with having robbed S. H. Williams, 6368 Ridge avenue, Brookmont, Md., a passenger in his cab, of $75. Williams managed to grab the key of the cab while he was struggling with Thomason, he told police, and ran into the home of Arthur V. Blackmon, 6406 Ridge avenue, and called police.

Sergt. Earl H. Burdine and Policeman Ernest L. Thompson responded and captured Thomason. The $75 was found beneath the cab, the policemen said.

Editor Is Arraigned For Roosevelt Attack

San Jose, Calif., Dec. 14 (AP).—P. Milton Smith, Mountain View editor, was arraigned today on a charge of criminal libel for an editorial attack on President Roosevelt and his preliminary hearing set for January 13.

The complaint was sworn to by Horace Beales, electrician, on behalf of the Mountain View Patriotic League. Smith was arrested after an editorial charged Roosevelt with being a "hypocrite, a mountebank and a false alarm."

Ohio Inventor Claims Remedy For Hay Fever

By the Associated Press.

Dayton, Ohio, Dec. 14.—A Dayton inventor who installed a temperature control unit in his wife's ice-box a year before the electric refrigeration industry accepted the idea, worked today to perfect a method for giving hay-fever sufferers relief in their own homes.

His home air-conditioner was tried out by three Dayton hay fever sufferers this fall and pronounced of great benefit in relieving them of the sniffles.

"They told me they could tell the difference after they'd been in the room for only 20 minutes," said the inventor, middle-aged Otto Murray Summers.

The hay fever gadget has two rivals for interest among the devices that filled Summers' laboratory.

There was an electrically powered grinding stone that turned out corn meal that enabled quantity production of "real Kentucky cawn-bread.

Summers, who won patent-office recognition as inventor of a temperature-control device widely used in electrical refrigeration, also worked to make thinner a paper-thin bed blanket.

Made of aluminum foil, the blanket can be laundered easily, Summers said. The principal difficulty is in getting it thin enough to make it comfortably instead of suffocatingly warm.

"I can hardly get it thin enough so it won't smother you," he explained. "It's got to be pretty thin, or you begin to 'steam' when you get under it."

Letters Praise Post Campaign

ready rallied to the appeals for thousands of the District's least privileged children. And daily more people are sending in toys and dolls, or contributing money.

Eight Government employes groups have already rallied behing The Post Fund for Washington's poorest children. Yesterday the Agriculture Athletic and Recreational Association set up 35 boxes in all of the department's buildings, including South Building, Administration, Atlantic, Standard Oil, Willard, Winer and 300 Lynworth place.

The committee at the Securities and Exchange Commission has already set up a box on the main floor of the SEC building, where toys and dolls for the fund can be left. The committee is also asking members of SEC Union to bring toys and dolls to a meeting in Thomas Circle Club December 18.

The committee includes: Mary L. Goswick, Ethel Greenblatt, Rose McCormick, Mrs. Dorothy Vibber, Milton Cohen, Joseph Hall, James Kindle, Lloyd Mathers, Wilton Freeman and Mike Naigles.

Toys, dolls and games for the fund need not be new. Old ones can be repaired and repainted to look like new. The renovating work is being done in the Christmas Workshop, 1524 L street northwest. At the Santa Claus Center, at the same address, distribution of toys and dolls is being taken care of without cost by the council of social agencies.

Money contributed to the fund should be mailed to the Washington Post, 1337 E street northwest, or can be left at the counter in the lobby of the Post building. Everything contributed goes directly into buying more toys and dolls for under-privileged youngsters.

Toys can be left in boxes placed in the 42 Peoples drug stores throughout the city, and in special boxes in Loew's Capitol, Columbia and Palace theaters. Or, by calling DEcatur 5130, you can arrange for a Terminal taxicab to pick up your gift without charge.

Farmer Killed Out of Revenge, Gangster Says the old man threw on the road and that was all the money he had."

Accomplice Held in W. Va. Admits Aid in Crime; Two Hunted Here.

Kirby said the three killers hid that night in a tent in the woods near Burnt Mills and fled to Richmond the following day. From there they went to West Virginia. Last week the trio attempted to hold up a cafe in Charleston and was surprised by police.

Kirby was wounded in the gun battle that followed but Reed and Gingell shot their way to freedom.

Matthews body was not found until Sunday, but in the weeks following his disappearance Pugh and Detective Sergeant Theodore Vollden, suspecting he had been killed, began to weave their circumstantial net around the gang led by Reed.

Pugh recalled Matthews had been a State's witness against Edward B. Reed, accused of attacking John F. Kolar, Arlington County real estate man, near Four Corners two years ago.

Vollten had evidence a band of young robbers led by Reed had been preying on Montgomery County merchants since last October.

In one of their forays the bandits attempted to rob the Manor Club but were driven away after a gun fight. Vollten recovered one of the bullets fired by the bandits from the club walls. He saed the bullet.

Fired From Same Gun.

Sunday evening ballistics experts said the bullet from the Manor Club wall was fired from the same gun as the bullets which killed Matthews. With this evidence Vollten drove to Charleston.

Kirby freely confessed participating in the attempted hold-up of the Manor Club and several other Montgomery County robberies with Reed.

Reed, according to Kirby, always carried the same gun with which he killed Matthews. Reed hurled the gun into a briar patch near Charleston as he fled police last week.

Kirby told police he met Reed while the two were serving a short term in the Maryland House of Correction.

"When I was released in October I looked up Reed right away and he and I and Gingell began living in a tent in the woods near Four Corners," Kirby related.

Kirby told police that when he help up Matthews he had no idea Reed intended to kill the old man.

"Reed said he didn't want to hold up Mr. Matthews because he might be recognized,'" Kirby said. "Reed and Gingell were hiding in the bushes until the old man screamed."

Matthews, a picturesque and well known figure in Montgomery County, usually carried more than $100 in his pockets—a fact well known to Reed, whose home is only a few miles from the Matthews farm.

The aged man and his 72-year-old brother, Charles, lived alone in the weather-beaten farm house. Charles did not report his brother's disappearance until November 23, believing, he explained, "that Elwood was on a party."

Searching parties scoured both sides of the Northwest Branch near the scene of the murder but it remained for two young Boy Scouts to discover the body. It is believed the body had been caught on a submerged rock and was dislodged after heavy rains last week had swollen the stream.

Kirby said another youth, whose name he gave police, participated in some of the robberies which preceded the murder.

Burnt Mills Robbery.

Among the robberies confessed by Kirby were:

The looting of William Giddings' general store at Burnt Mills, Md.

The holdup of a taxicab driver in Takoma Park.

The attempted robbery of the Manor Club.

Ironically, Kirby's confession revealed Matthews' life was sacrificed because the gang was unable to locate the supply of golf balls in the Indian Springs Country Club.

Matthews was preparing to start home from the Four Corners gasoline station just as the three bandits, in an ugly mood, were tramping across the field toward their tent in the woods.

The aged farmer started trudging up the road which led to his home, one-fifth of a mile from Four Corners, at 8:12 p. m. As he crossed the road he waved to a friend on a bus which was due to start up the same road at 8:15. In the minutes that intervened the gang had slugged Matthews and dragged him into the dark field. His friends was puzzled because he did not see the old man walking along as the bus went up the road.

Reed, police revealed, served a year and a half in the Lorton Reformatory in 1931 for robbery and almost immediately after he was released was arrested in Montgomery County for larceny and sent to the House of Correction for two years.

Tells About Murder

W. JOSEPH KIRBY.

Van Sweringen Activity Illegal, Wheeler Says

Terminal Purchase Called 'Violation of Federal and State Laws.'

By the Associated Press.

The late Van Sweringen brothers, of Cleveland, were accused before a Senate committee yesterday of having violated a Federal and a State law in the purchase of terminal properties while building their $3,000,000,000 industrial empire.

Senator Wheeler (Democrat), of Montana, chairman of a Senate committee inquiring into railroad financing, said a "dummy" trust company had been set up after the purchase to "get around" a Missouri statute requiring approval of such a sale by the Missouri Railroad Regulatory Commission.

"I think the hearings today are the best evidence of how useless it is for any legislative body to pass laws to cure evils which exist in the public mind," Wheeler said. "If they can be avoided by skullduggery or shifty means we might as well abandon Congress and not pass any more laws."

The Clayton antitrust act had been violated, Wheeler said, in a transaction between Terminal Shares, Inc., and the Missouri Pacific Railroad, both part of the Van Sweringen system.

These properties were in St. Joseph and North Kansas City, Mo.

Earlier William C. Potter, chairman of the Guaranty Trust Co., of New York, testified he had rejected as "crooked and improper" a proposal of "overzealous young men" in his organization for dealing with an indebtedness of the late Van Sweringen brothers of Cleveland.

The proposal was designed to protect a New York banking syndicate, headed by J. P. Morgan & Co., against losses incurred from the purchase of $10,500,000 of Missouri Pacific Railroad bonds.

Wheeler sought from Potter an admission that the option was "intended to disguise a loan" because the Van Sweringens were unable under the terms of Allighany's charter to borrow more money.

"I knew it was a straight sale and we took a loss," Potter said. "What was the use of crying about it?"

Under the terms of the transaction, Alleghany Corporation, controled by O. P. and M. J. Van Sweringen, sold the bonds at 100 with an option to repurchase them at the same price, the testimony showed. The bonds were then selling at 105½. The option was permitted to expire when Alleghany was unable to repurchase the bonds, and the price declined.

As a result, the banks faced a substantial loss.

$11,928 Expended For Legislature

Annapolis, Md., Dec. 14 (AP).—The special session of the Maryland Legislature which ended early Saturday cost $11,928, with the printing and telephone bills still to be paid, it was learned today at the office of William S. Gordy, jr., State comptroller.

Of the $25,000 appropriated for the expenses of the session a total of $14,189.02 has been spent. In addition to the $11,918 already expended for legislative expenses, a $2,261.02 printing bill contracted during the special session held in March was paid.

One of the tems which added to the cost of the session, which began Tuesday, was the mileage paid the members. This ranged from $110 for members from Garrett County to $15 for members living in Baltimore City or Anne Arundel County.

Sterling Gifts By Stieff

ROSE

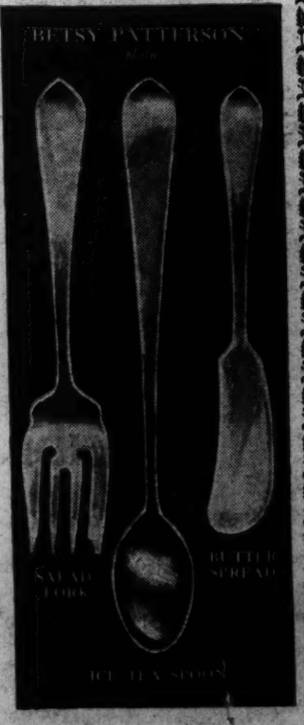

AFTER DINNER COFFEE SET
Complete, $150.00

The beauty of Stieff Sterling is lasting, for Stieff Silver is genuine Solid Silver. In plain or decorated styles, Stieff Sterling is always the same—heavy in weight, and artistic in design.
We illustrate, herewith, two of Stieff's popular patterns—the plain Betsy Patterson, reminiscent of Colonial days, and the highly decorative Rose, an authentically rich design, always in good taste.
These are but two of the nine popular, open-stock Stieff patterns we display for your selection.
More important pieces may also be had in Plain or Hand-Chased Sterling Silver by Stieff.
(Detailed prices on request.)

Speedy Solution.

Another brutal murder has been committed within the immediate environs of Washington, this time in Montgomery County. It was in November of last year that the garrotted body of Corinna Loring was found in a nearby part of Prince Georges County. Her assailants have never been apprehended.

All Washington sees hope for a more satisfactory prosecution of the Matthews case, brought to light in gruesome fashion by the rising waters of the upper Anacostia. While the scene of this crime is outside the District limits, the outrage occurred too close to the metropolitan area to be ignored here. And it is reasonable to assume that the killers might have been more hesitant if the National Capital and adjacent territory were not so notoriously lacking in effective police protection.

On Montgomery County and the State of Maryland fell primary responsibility for what appears to be a quick solution of this murder. For the Rockville authorities in particular it was a challenge to present a better record for justice than can be claimed by Prince Georges County. To achieve that record, very obviously, better detective work than was demonstrated in the Loring case was needed and provided.

Yardstick Or Whip?

"During the next four years," writes Morris L. Cooke, Rural Electrification administrator, in the current issue of the New Republic, "regulation (of electric power rates) will be largely by 'yardstick.'" Huge publicly owned plants such as Grand Coulee, Bonneville, Boulder Dam and the TVA are needed, in his opinion, "to break the 'vicious circle' of too high rates and too little use." At the same time Mr. Cooke protests that there is no move to nationalize the $13,000,000,000 privately owned power industry. "The drive," he asserts, "is rather to force the electrical industry to perform honestly and adequately under its licenses—local, State and Federal."

This is certainly a reasonable objective, as is the demand for a lowering of rate levels to a point at which they will yield no more than fair profits above production costs. Why, then, is Mr. Cooke "almost sure" that the ultimate result of the Government's power policies, as he outlines them, will be "public ownership on a wide scale?" The answer is supplied by Mr. Cooke's indorsement of a form of competition between public and private industry in which the cards are stacked against private management.

The REA administrator may be disposed to minimize the constitutional obstacles to Government operation of an immense power business, but, if he means to be fair, he cannot ignore the economic significance of the Government's contention that its power profits are merely incidental to control of floods and navigation. This means that the cost of generating electricity in Federal plants can scarcely be separated from other expenses in the development of waterways. In the hands of Government officials desirous of suppressing private competition or, like Mr. Cooke, doubtful of the possibility of improving the "low social attitude of the industry", such an uncertain yardstick, instead of being a measurement of efficiency, may easily become a whip with which to drive private enterprise from the field.

Indeed, even with the best of intentions, fair competition between publicly owned and privately owned utilities is virtually out of the question. In addition to the difficulty of ascertaining comparative production costs, the Government generally has the advantage of lower interest rates for its funds, and special privileges such as freedom from taxation and various kinds of concealed subsidies. Unless these ulterior advantages are swept away or allowed for in computing fair rate charges, the yardstick becomes a thoroughly misleading test of adequacy. Hence, the defeat of private industry in any competitive contest in which the Government desires its overthrow is practically a foregone conclusion.

Use of governmental power to crush private enterprise is one of the methods used by the Soviet Union. In discussing conditions in 1924, Joseph Stalin said recently:

> This was the first period of the New Economic Policy when the Soviet power permitted a certain revival of capitalism along with the general development of socialism, when it planned in the process of competition of the two economic systems—the capitalist and the socialist—to assure the superiority of the socialist system over the capitalist system. The task was to consolidate the position of socialism in process of this competition, to attain the liquidation of capitalist elements and consummate the victory of the socialist system as the basic system of national economy.

A similar method of procedure might be followed with great success by those who wish to destroy the private power industry in this country. Unfair and indiscriminate application of the "yardstick method" would provide the surest possible way in which to effect a "liquidation" of private interests.

Japan, Germany And China.

Not the least astonishing development arising out of the kidnaping of Chiang Kai-shek is that Japan and Germany are now reported to be conferring about it.

As it happens Japan's direct interests in Shensi Province are negligible; those of Germany non-existent. But since there appears to be a Communist angle to the latest Chinese crisis, Tokyo and Berlin are apparently prepared to capitalize it on the basis of their recently concluded agreement.

That agreement pledged the two nations to joint measures against all those who "at home or abroad, directly or indirectly, are active in the service of the Communist Internationale or lend a helping hand to its disruptive work." It is not difficult, therefore, for Tokyo and Berlin to advance the thesis that the kidnaping of Chiang Kai-shek was the result of a plot hatched in Moscow for the removal of the man who for years has fought communism in China tooth and nail.

Even if this were true it would hardly justify Japan, with or without the aid of Germany, in violating China's sovereignty in order to smash the Chinese Communists. But the truth in this hypothesis is hard to find.

To be sure Chiang Kai-shek has conducted one campaign after another against the Chinese Communists. There is no love lost between him and Moscow. Yet Chiang's not unsuccessful efforts to stabilize and strengthen China have worked to the advantage of Russia, which prefers a strong to a weak China along its flank. By the same token it has worked to the disadvantage of Japan. No doubt that is why Japanese militarists have in recent months repeatedly demanded the elimination of Chiang.

The capture of Chiang and his possible disappearance as a factor in Chinese affairs undoubtedly works to the advantage of the Japanese war lords. In the first place it eliminates their most dangerous opponent, whose Fabian policy has proved far more difficult to fight than any frontal attack by China. And, in the second place, it provides these militarists with a unique opportunity of proving to the skeptical Japanese public that the German-Japanese agreement has real value.

To a large number of Japanese, their country, in signing that agreement, bought a pig in a poke. So formidable has been the opposition to the action taken by the Tokyo government that it began to look as if Foreign Minister Arita might be offered up as a scapegoat. Now the war office is in a position to argue that direct Japanese intervention in northwest China is made necessary by the growth of communism. In undertaking such intervention Japan, one can say, need no longer act alone; it may now receive the valuable support of Germany.

It remains to be seen whether the efforts of the militarists to win over public opinion in support of the agreement with Germany will be successful. For the outside world the actual application of that accord to the present situation in China would represent a danger of great potentiality. It would clearly indicate that the two nations are prepared to use the Red bogey as a screen behind which to consummate the destruction of any nation's sovereignty that stands in the way of their imperialistic ambitions.

It is, indeed, a distinctly new technique of imperialism which has been worked out for trial application, whether in Spain, China or elsewhere.

Senator Glass Must Choose.

Senator Glass is said to be hesitating between a choice of two important posts—the chairmanship of the Senate Committee on Appropriations, which he held in the last Congress, and that of the Committee on Banking and Currency, for which he is eligible as a result of Senator Fletcher's death. To the many who believe that the most immediately pressing task before the Administration is control of expenditures, the chairmanship of the Appropriations Committee seems of paramount importance at present. Although there is a possibility of important banking legislation at the next session, it is not very probable. Furthermore, if such legislation were drafted, Senator Glass' long experience and extensive knowledge would be at the service of the committee.

The first step toward establishment of a sound banking system in any case lies in a cessation of deficit financing which has seriously weakened the banking structure by overloading bank portfolios with Government securities. To make progress in the direction of a balanced budget it is essential that appropriations be cut, especially outlays for relief purposes. Even under firm leadership in Congress the work of retrenchment will be very difficult.

If the important Committee on Appropriations were to be headed by a Senator more interested in buying political good will than in reducing expenditures, the prospect of a balanced budget would recede still farther into the future. It looks, therefore, as if Senator Glass could serve the country best by retaining the position he now holds as head of the Appropriations Committee.

Everyman.

In the message broadcast by the Archbishop of Canterbury on Sunday, as in many another sermon throughout the English-speaking world, ran a note of the most profound disappointment at the failure of the former King to measure up to his responsibilities. To the head of the Church of England it seems particularly "strange and sad" that Edward "should have sought his happiness . . . within a social circle whose standards and ways of life are alien to all the best instincts of his people."

The conviction that Edward VIII failed tragically, both as man and as prince, is likely to deepen rather than lessen as time passes, and as the romantic aspects of the crisis wear thin or are shown to be lacking in those enduring qualities which alone make love worthy of the name. But a prelate as thoughtful as the Archbishop of Canterbury might reasonably have looked deeper before passing his public rebuke on the "fast" set which he evidently holds largely responsible for the late king's downfall.

The present Duke of Windsor, like most of his intimate friends and associates, is of the war generation. The fact that he was not allowed to risk his life in battle does not minimize the power of the influences which beat upon him, as upon all other youths who reached their majority as the civilization for which they had been trained went down in confusion and slaughter.

For the youthful Edward, as for millions of others, the lessons of years of careful training, the laborious self-discipline which had meaning only as measured against a predictable future, were overwhelmed by the mental, moral and spiritual turmoil unleashed upon the world in August, 1914. The strong and stolid, in spite of various pardonable lapses, survived this storm unharmed. But the sensitive and emotional will in one form or another carry its traces to their graves. Edward was one of these.

Whatever the future holds for the Duke of Windsor, it is unlikely that he will enter into public controversy concerning the course which he has chosen. There the archbishop, who speaks easily from pulpit and into microphone, has the advantage over him. But were Edward to respond he could make a devastating answer to this prelate, and to all others who have drawn from his unhappy story the moral that what the world needs is a "solemn recall to religion." He could point out that if organized Christianity had not lapsed so miserably in 1914, and often since that date, there might have been fewer tragic individual tumbles from the straight and narrow path of Christian duty.

The Duke of Windsor has failed in the test and from now on can be expected to "dree his weird," as the Scots say, in accord with that decision. But when strictures are passed upon him he is entitled to recall the lesson of that morality play which is older, and perhaps more instinct with the spirit of true religion, than is the church headed by the Archbishop of Canterbury.

He can recall that when Everyman is summoned by Death to appear before God only one companion may go with him. And that character, Good Deeds, is one with whom the abdicated King is not unfriendly.

Hot or cold? Surf and mermaids or toboggans and snow queens?

This is the season when the Sunday travel editors are at their most tantalizing. One page has nothing but the warm waters and idle palms of the South; facing it are the sugary hills of the North. To visit the first would mean a tan, summery clothing and dolce far niente. A winter's outing, on the other hand, should properly have a wintry background—glistening ice, silent snow and the exhilaration of winter sports. A trip to the South means certain shivering on returning to the slush and damp of home; but the North demands strained muscles and chapped wrists as the price for a taste of its hibernal pleasures. Which to choose?

Choose both! And that's entirely possible, if the travel editors are to be trusted. Combine North and South by going West—to Idaho. There, amid the Sawtooth Mountains will be found the solution to the winter vacationists dilemma. In Borahland one may slip one's feet into hickory skis and still go near the water. For outdoor bathing is to be found within snowball's throw of a resort at Sun Valley and two warm water pools await skiers as soon as they can exchange mackinaws for trunks.

The captious note is out of place, but it must be observed that no information is vouchsafed as to whether mosquitoes or chilblains are Sun Valley's characteristic at night.

One of the greatest hazards to human life is a streamlined car driven by a gink with a streamlined forehead.

A Western woman has just divorced her fourth husband, each of whom is a barber. Next!

Why did Nature streamline the tortoise for 80-mile speed and then allot it so little h. p. it can't get out of low gear?

Why is it that the world has sympathy for a man with a wooden leg, but only contempt for one with a wooden head?

The Bible On War.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Mr. Henry Gilligan, one of the school board members, is quoted in a press notice anent the banning of the school weekly, Scholastic, in your issue of December 3 as saying: "I can think of nothing in the Bible that justifies such a position as Scholastic has taken." This grand old book is improperly abused much more than it is properly used.

Mr. Gilligan's remarks appear to be predicated on the following suggestions for a student anti-war program which appeared three years ago in the editorial pages of Scholastic.

"We will not fight in any war which has not been declared by a majority vote in a Nation-wide referendum.

"We will not accept conscription of our bodies for the Army and Navy without an equally complete conscription of capital and the profits of industry."

It would appear that the conditions prescribed by this pronouncement are reasonable and fair, and would tend to prevent war and thereby promote peace; and if they could be effectively carried out, the advocates of such a method would be called peacemakers.

I would recommend that Mr. Gilligan refresh his knowledge of the Bible by beginning with the fifth chapter of Mathew, in the ninth verse of which we find these words: "Blessed are the peacemakers, for they shall be called the children of God."

In the fifth chapter, seventeenth verse of Deuteronomy, one of the books of the Old Testament, we find these words: "Thou shalt not kill." That God-given command has not been qualified in any part of the record of God's law with such words as "except in war." On the contrary, it was confirmed as still God's law by his only direct representative that has appeared on earth in these words: "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself."

Is the love of neighbor expressed by killing and maiming him and his wife and children with bombs, shrapnel, machine guns and poisonous gases, even though it be done under the guise of patriotism?

If it be contended that we must defend ourselves by the same method that nations use at such deadly costs to their neighbors, I answer that such action cannot be defended as Christian from the Bible standpoint, and in confirmation of this statement I quote the words of Christ as recorded in the thirty-eighth, thirty-ninth and fortieth verses of fifth Mathew: "Ye have heard that it hath been said, an eye for an eye, and a tooth for a tooth, but I say unto you that ye resist not evil, but whosoever shall smite thee on thy right cheek, turn to him the other also. And if any man shall sue thee at law and take away thy coat, let him have thy cloak also."

Wars must be as long as the world is ruled by the powerful invisible evil spiritual forces (Ephesians, 6:12) of Satan, the god of the world (Second Cor., 4:4). Most of the wars since the death of Christ have been wars of aggression. Men have not waited to have their coats taken so that they might give the takers their cloaks also. Strong nations have proceeded to take both the coats and cloaks of weaker nations, and they will continue to do so until the time appointed for the Prince of Peace to end such evil practices.

The Bible plainly states that wars would come, and also plainly tells us the reason why they would come. The reason is stated in James, 4:1: "From whence come wars and fightings among you? Come they not hence even of your lusts that war in your members." Such fleshly lusts as covetness, greed, envy, inordinate vanity and pride bring wars. C. A. M. WELLS.

Jefferson Junior High.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Imagine a public school housing over 650 boys and girls that faces an elevated railroad on which trains roll by in numbers every hour of the day. Realize the smoke and vapor continually carried into the school rooms through open windows in fine weather and by ventilating shafts during the winter months. It gives a picture of the difficulties involved in the location of the Jefferson Junior High School, the continual struggle with noise and soot. Enter the school erected in 1872 and condemned as a building some 15 years ago. Two entrances open into two separate square halls. On each hall four school rooms are located and a wide staircase ascends to a second floor arranged similarly. There are no corridors, and to go from one square hall to the other, it is necessary to pass through two school rooms and interrupt the classwork of from 42 to 46 children.

The top floor is given up to an assembly hall with stage crudely equipped and long benches that have been there since Joseph Henry dedicated the building in its pristine modernity. In the basement are the gymnasiums—small for the accommodation of 40 students, they are furnished with the usual wall pipes and flues found in basements. There is no equipment whatever except a long narrow room containing showers where elbows touch elbows under the long line of sprays.

No fault can be found with the education received by children of the Jefferson Junior High School. The principal and teachers are efficient and devoted to their boys and girls. Comparison, however, of this school with other junior high schools throughout Washington indicates the neglect that the Southwest section of the city has experienced from 1872 to 1936. There is a plan to remove the school from its location at Sixth and D to the block between Seventh and Eighth, stretching from H to I. Half the land has been purchased, I believe, but delays and difficulties have arisen.

With a new school building and well-equipped recreational center the small Southwest section of Washington could be re-created into a desirable residential region, a worthy memorial to our third President. ISABELLE STONE.

Hotel Employe's View.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Mr. Franklyn Waltman, a writer of reputation, cannot see the necessity for a NRA in the light of such investigations as he has made. He produces figures. What he says goes with me, but only for such industries as he has covered. There are others, the hotel business, for instance.

Right now the President and the United States Chamber of Commerce are trying to make jobs for those who are still unplaced. Some of these jobs can be made under their very noses, in the Washington hotels. Leading hotels, since the break up of the NRA, are now employing numbers for 60 hours a week at $15 (no meals or tips). In the meantime, as we read and hear, the hotels have been prospering ever since 1933. The above figures, by the way, apply to the "no tip" departments of the high-class hotels. What the lesser ones are paying, that I don't know.

Lucius M. Boomer was the most social-minded hotel man who ever hung up his hat in Washington, D. C. He ran (through a resident managing director) a prominent local hotel as a unit of the Dupont-Boomer chain. I was there. This, of course, was during good times. In the "house department" (men) he worked us (on a monthly basis) at about $20 a week (52 hours). No meals or tips, but many opportunities for well-paid overtime work. In addition, he maintained free life insurance (the company paying the premiums; cheap group sick insurance you paid $1 a month entitling you to $10 a week for 26 weeks in the calendar year); ten days' vacation on pay for all employes of one year service or more.

Summing up: 1926 (good business) $20 plus privileges for 52 hours; 1936 (good business) $15 with no privileges for 60 hours.

An industry that has a clear conscience needn't fear a reasonable NRA. But an industry that doesn't play the game ought to.

Lord Marley's Advice.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The anti-British propaganda with which this country has been deluged for the past 15 years seems to have reached its limit in the letter from the Kevin Barry Council, AARIR. I was innocently supposing that the Irish had a sense of humor, but here they reprove Lord Marley for giving us "instructions" and then immediately proceed to give us instructions themselves. They accuse Lord Marley of trying to get us to pull British chestnuts out of the fire, their motive being that they want us to pull Irish chestnuts out. Lord Marley talked frankly as an Englishman; these hyphenates had the gall to address us as "fellow Americans" and then sign their letters as Irishmen. But even without their signature, their foreign allegiance is obvious enough—they can't conceal it.

Their slogan is 700 years of British misrule in Ireland. Because our ancestors "misruled" their ancestors hundreds of years ago these aliens want us to join them in hating our British cousins! "For 700 years" the British have made alliances and prevented the rise of dominating military empires on the Continent. Now the most vital interests of the British and of the Americans are threatened—namely, the interest in a peaceful world in the future, the interest in saving $2,000,000,000 a year in armament charges (our so-called neutrality policy will soon bring it to $2,000,000,000), the interest in checking the most aggressive, the most unabashed predatory militarism that the world has seen for centuries. Our policy should be the closest co-operation with the British and with the League—a strong policy on our part even now could revive the League—to organize the whole world for peace. That is the only real assurance of permanent peace.

But these Irish are incapable of considering any rational policy for America. They may try to think about foreign policy but their attempt to think is swallowed in a wave of hate for England, so they express nothing but blind emotion. A policy of organizing world peace would benefit England, too, so down with it, say they.

Calendar Reform.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: In reply to Mr. J. E. Jones' letter of December 11, let me say that neither the United States Government nor the Roman Catholic Church has ever taken any position on either the 13 or the 12 month blank day calendar schemes, both of which disrupt the weekly cycle, nor has either of these two organizations taken any action favoring the calling of an international conference to consider either plan. As a matter of fact, none of the religious organizations quoted by Mr. Jones are in reality in favor of a plan to change the weekly cycle each year, as is contemplated by the "blank-day" plans in both the 13 and the 12 month schemes.

The trouble is that these religious organizations, and also the International Labor Office, did not thoroughly understand what radical changes were involved in the "blank-day" schemes, and many of the leaders are now admitting that the "blank day" is impracticable and objectionable to the constituencies of their organizations.

Edward's Private Life.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I read with much interest an article stating that, perhaps, the much beloved King Edward VIII would sometime make his home among us. I beg that we, as Americans, be good to him even to the extent of minding our own business. In his struggle between man and king, the man in him has won.

The burden of his decision will always rest heavily upon his heart. Let us be kind to him even to the extent of leaving him and his private life alone.

Let us not be unmindful that one of our own most beloved citizens is now living in England because of the "Peeping Toms" who insisted on making first page stories of the color of the bath soap, and did it or did it not match the bath mat, etc., etc.

Trailers For Two.

HAVE you considered what to give your 10-year-old daughter for Christmas? Has she already a Shirley Temple doll, doll carriage, and all accessories? Has she already a Compton's Encyclopedia, a Book of Knowledge, junior Britannica and the modern equivalent of the Little Colonel books? Is she already equipped for every sort of sport from sun bathing to skiing? Then obviously she needs just what our 10-year-old pines for—a trailer.

And also there is Grandmother. Grandmothers are sometimes very hard to please at Christmas. Of course, they always smile and seem happy amid the tissue and tinsel, but you never feel that the shawl and footwarmers are filling the bill quite the way skates and bicycles do for 10-year-olds. Or the way they used to.

When we say that Christmas is for the young we mean to include the old. Dear Old Mother, we say, and dear Old Dad—they are going to get more pleasure out of it than anyone, just through being with the young and turning back the years. And so we rack our brains to be sure they receive their fair share of tissue paper and stickers. It does seem a little forced to do up the lavender and old lace in paper covered with scotties or cocktail glasses, but we must be Christmasy, no matter what.

But this year Grandmother and the Tenspot are making it all simple. Each wants a trailer. It heads the list for Suzy. She has put a second choice on a doll house because she is practical in her way and some instinct warns her that a trailer would not fit happily under the Christmas tree. The doll house would be an agreeable substitute. Nevertheless, she is quite serious about the trailer. If older children, 16 or so, can ask for and receive cars of their own, why not a trailer for Suzy?

She knows a car of her own would be of no use, but it is clear that a trailer would be practical as well as great fun. She pictures herself being driven to school in the trailer while finishing her homework comfortably settled at the fold-away desk she saw in one model. And coming home from school she can start right in to play without losing any time. Of course, she intends to spend the summer in the trailer and has even said she would prefer it to going to camp—well, anyway, for part of the season.

Yes, Suzy is both practical and determined about it. In thinking back over the development of this idea we are somewhat chagrined to remember how clever we thought ourselves to leave Suzy and Grandmother at the Trailer Exhibit while we took in the rest of the Automobile Show.

However, in Suzy's case the inspiration is quite clear. The fact that she has put a doll's house as second choice is our clew. We know that the trailer appeals to her primarily as a great big doll house and we intend to take advantage of our position as parents. Her desire for playing house need not be repressed, but the second choice will give her plenty of scope and the mother-chauffeur role need not be complicated by any covered wagon fixation.

But when it comes to Grandmother we are stumped. She is not one of those whose temperament inclines to flock after every new vogue. She is dignified and stately and a grand dame of the old school. She is British-born and steeped in Victorian tradition. Although she has lived in this country for half a century, she has never bent the knee to the American love for mechanical conveniences. She has always esteemed personal service above electricity. She prefers open fires to radiators, hot water in shining brass pots to plumbing, early tea to percolators. She positively dislikes radios, mix-masters, vacuum cleaners, card-shufflers and sandwich grills.

Grandmother is critical of children, movies and comics. She has consistently avoided everything that mechanizes life—she abhors the tendency to standardization and the cramped confines of apartment life has made her idealize her youthful recollection of park-like settings. She particularly dislikes summer resorts. Yet after just one evening spent examining trailers at the Automobile Show Grandmother has gone over altogether to America's latest and greatest gadget.

For the trailer when completely equipped is the finest collection of Americanisms in existence. In detail and in sum it is typical of our mechanistic leanings, our love for economy of space, our dislike of roots and responsibility, and our urge to go places. How could this combination ever win her heart?

The key to the mystery was found when we heard Grandmother say: "There is only one thing I don't like about this model. It is not equipped with a telephone from the trailer to the chauffeur, although the salesman did say he thought one could be put in."

So that was it. Grandmother saw in this trailer a grand opportunity for adventure, but not entirely divorced from the family retainer touch. She pictured herself and Grandfather comfortably settled in the cozy interior. She had only to pick up the phone and say, "Home James," and they will be off. But Grandmother had forgotten that when you live in a trailer that is home. ISABEL MIDDLETON.

Fair Enough

By Westbrook Pegler.

Adolph Hitler's Boy.

ADOLF HITLER is a curious figure in any circumstance, but more so when he defends the sanctity of treaties, and still a little more so when he appeals to an American prizefight commission for his rights as stated in that which, in other circumstances, he would be quick to call a scrap of paper. Herr Hitler has won his case before the New York commission in the matter of Max Schmeling, the idol of the Hitler youth, and Jimmy Braddock, the American who licked the man who knocked out Schmeling.

This was a case in which Der Fuehrer's boy demanded fulfillment of a contract calling for a championship fight.

As tribunals go, the New York prizefight commission ranks well below the League of Nations, and it was a solemn spectacle in which the majestic statesmen of the cauliflower industry out-solemned the stately diplomats of Geneva and decided in favor of Der Fuehrer. Considering that Herr Schmeling now has become a Nazi institution and the heavyweight championship a formal ambition of the Reich, the controversy swelled beyond the normal jurisdiction of the New York commission into a field of international affairs.

True, the commission, in its time and particularly under the chairmanship of the world-famed James A. Farley, has not hesitated to take in new territory, and often has passed laws of its own affecting affairs in other States and nations. But those were matters of pugilism, domestic politics and cauliflower diplomacy, and none of them ever excited the official interest of foreign consuls.

• • • •

IN THIS PROCEEDING, however, the prizefight commission had the delicate duty to deciding an issue of great importance to a nation technically described as friendly but known to be sensitive, not to say hysterical. It was, in effect, a treaty case rather than a routine adjustment of one of those ambiguous prizefight documents, and war has been averted only by the instinctive honor and statesmanship of the commission, unassisted by counsel from the Department of State in sugar-scoop coats and spats.

Probably it was just as well that the Department of State did not intervene. For the department might have brought in a brief case showing that Herr Hitler himself habitually repudiates agreements of comparable importance, and the commission, in that case, might have put its back up and told him to go to hell and see if hell would have him.

Herr Schmeling, who represents the great repudiator in pugilism, held Braddock's agreement to fight him for the title, but Braddock, being poor and not a State institution, wished to defer the issue until he had first made a few dollars fighting Joe Louis. In pugilism this is no unreasonable or unusual course. In fact, the career of Adolf Hitler's boy provides a somewhat similar performance, for he fled New York when he was champion to fight Willie Stribling in Cleveland and thus postponed for one year his fight with Jack Sharkey, who held what was known as the logical contendership.

He did beat Stribling, but when he finally encountered Sharkey in a production known as the Battle of the Lithe, Lean Bodies for Fame and Fortune, he lost the heavyweight championship according to his forebodings. Thus it will be seen that Mr. Braddock's modest demand for time to lick a sucker before meeting the issue of the logical contendership was not without distinguished precedent in the career of Adolf Hitler's boy. I trust that Schmeling will not resent my calling him Adolf Hitler's boy, for if he did so he would find it necessary to remain in the United States, a political exile in honorable company.

• • • •

HE HAS NOT always been Adolf Hitler's boy, however. He was only Max Schmeling, a German, until after he had knocked out Joe Louis last June. Up to the hour of that contest Herr Hitler had pointedly refrained from any recognition because Schmeling had been knocked out by Max Baer, a Jew, who had then been knocked out by Louis. He seemed not quite fit to represent Aryan might in an issue of such importance. Having won, however, he was joyously acclaimed by Der Fuehrer, who also sent roses to his wife, and he is now a symbol of Aryanism, although once, before the rise of Hitler and the Aryans, he pointed to his cheek bones, his narrow eyes and his rough, black hair and said some Germans were descended from the ancient Mongols.

Knowing so much about the prizefight racket and so little about the Nazi state, the prizefight commission probably did not realize that there could exist a nation so low in honors and so poor in world leadership as would aspire to the heavyweight championship as a national ambition. Others, knowing both the one and the other, will realize why it was a matter of patriotic importance to Adolf Hitler's boy to compel the observance of a condition which he avoided in his own brief term as champion.

The Once Over

By H. I. Phillips

Husband Tells All.

John R. Marsh, husband of Margaret Mitchell, authoress of "Gone With the Wind," says he read the manuscript of the book ten years ago, whenever his wife submitted installments to him, and told her it was good and should be published. "I never read the completed novel until less than a year ago," he said, "but I read it in fragments as Margaret wrote it, and I always said it was a great story."

Oh, come on, Mr. Marsh, and confess the truth! Don't you remember the dialogue?:

Margaret—John, dear, are you busy?

John (reading the funnies)—Well, I'm right in the middle of an article on golf, but . . .

Margaret—I wish you'd read another chapter.

John—Chapter? Chapter of what?

Margaret—That book I told you about.

John (yawning)—Oh, are you still working on that thing?

• • • •

Margaret—I wish you wouldn't dismiss my novel so lightly, honey. I've worked so hard on it.

John—I'm not dismissing it lightly, dear; not at all. I didn't skip a word in what you showed me. It held my undivided interest. I always did like stories about the Canadian mounties.

Margaret—But my novel isn't about the Canadian mounties.

John—No, of course not. But there was a chapter about the murder in the eternal snows, and . . .

Margaret—Please, John, don't lie to me. My novel is about the old South. There isn't a snowflake in it.

John (a little embarrassed)—Oh, yes, I remember . . . the old South . . . I thought you did John Brown very well.

• • • •

Margaret—I didn't touch John Brown. (She weeps.)

John—There, there, darling! Don't cry. It must have been some other book. But I did read all those chapters, and I thought them very good . . . for a beginner, I mean. I didn't think you had it in you.

Margaret (hurt)—Why didn't you think I had it in me? I wrote long before I ever met you!

• • • •

John—Now don't get excited. You don't want me to sit here and tell you I think you've written a great book, do you? You don't want me to say the publishers will fight to get it? You don't want me to say you've written a best seller, and all that sort of rot, do you?

Margaret (weeping again)—Of course not. I don't want you to lie to me.

• • • •

Nine Years Later.

Margaret (receiving a cartload of royalties)—John, it sold nearly a million copies. We're rich!

John—Didn't I tell you so! I knew it all the while!

Ambition.

To own a fireplace
Is my heart's desire;
That is—to own a fireplace
Where I can build a fire.

NELLIE DIACK HEGEMAN.

Capt. Jacobus Kwaak, Great South Bay oysterman, says it will be the toughest winter since 1918. Oysters are fatter and are digging deeper into their oyster beds than they have for 18 years, he says, an unfailing sign of the big shivers. Fifty billion oysters, in other words, can't be wrong.

A New Deal for Civil Service

Career Plan Advocated For Talented Workers

By Robert C. Albright.

Careers have been carved in the Government service. Workers, against odds, have risen from the ranks to positions of distinction, sometimes through "pull," more often through sheer ability.

But today there is no sign-posted high road the efficient young recruit may follow to high pay, prestige and posts of administrative responsibility. Talented workers remain clerks all their lives. Brilliant specialists go unrewarded.

Unusual exceptions prove the rule.

In the State Department, a limited number of young men are placed in rigorous training, advanced to foreign service officers, and may rise to higher posts through a merit system of promotions. Some have become ambassadors, but such office is outside the classified service.

Equal opportunities exist in some professional, scientific and technical branches of the services. The career principle rules in the Public Health Service. Young scientists go far in the Bureau of Standards and in the many bureaus of the Agriculture Department. Young engineers may find their dreams fulfilled in the Bureau of Public Roads and the Coast and Geodetic Survey. Economists may become division chiefs in Departments of Agriculture, Commerce or Labor.

There is no such opportunity in the clerical, administrative and fiscal service. This lack was exposed by the Commission on Inquiry on Public Service Personnel, following an extensive survey. The commission proposed an immediate program to attract the best man-power, and reward a job well done.

"The service should be divided into ladders," the commission said, "for which young men are normally selected to start on the bottom rung. These ladders must rise from different points, depending upon the kinds of service, and an opportunity must be provided for advance at different rates of speed and for transfer from one ladder to another."

The report is being widely discussed and may yield its first results when the President's Committee on Administrative Management reports its personnel findings near the close of this year. It is expected to favor the "career" principle.

A plan for adapting the principle to the existing Federal personnel structure already has been laid down by Civil Service Commissioner Leonard D. White, in a series of lectures delivered at the University of Chicago.

Unlike the Commission of Inquiry on Public Service Personnel, Commissioner White believes the amount of innovation needed would be relatively slight, and it would be unnecessary to disturb greatly existing arrangements and vested rights.

Specialized Career Service.

"In proposing an administrative career service," White said, "I do not suggest that we should abruptly wipe out of existence the present structure. Nor do I suggest that we should displace men and women who are holding positions which fall within the administrative group. Such a procedure not only would be unnecessary and wholly unwise, it would be harmful to the highest degree."

His plan is to establish a career service in certain large areas of specialization, such as finance, public works activities and others. The fiscal career service, for example, would involve co-ordination and supervision of the activities of some 50,000 employes. There would be a postal career service, embracing more than 200,000 workers. Similar career services would be established in other fields of Federal endeavor, such as commerce, agriculture, labor, territories and dependencies, public works and public health.

At the top, as the major co-ordinating and directing agency of the whole administrative machine, would be a civil general staff, largely built from career men in the various units.

These positions, White said, could be scheduled without disturbing in any way the existing classification which has been worked out under the classification act of 1923 by merely drawing a line around these selected posts.

Vacancies in the new administrative corps would be filled by surveying other classes of employment by transferring suitable men from public corporations, by reaching down into the State governments, or by open competitive civil service examination. Some 2,500 selected for the so-called "administrative corps" would be carefully trained over the years, rising ever to higher positions of responsibility as capacity was demonstrated.

Five Subdivisions Recommended.

On the other hand, the Commission of Inquiry on Public Service Personnel proposed establishment of a career basis for the general appointive services through subdivision into five broad career services, as follows:

The administrative service.
The professional and technical service.
The clerical service.
The skilled and trades service.
The unskilled service.

Under the Commission of Inquiry's plan, provision would be made for transfer both within each service group and from one group to another. Recruitment would be "geared to the existing American educational system" and there would be competitive entrance examinations for all positions.

Certification by accredited professional associations and by legally established professional bodies for all professional and technical positions would be required.

Advancement would be made on the basis of merit to the highest non-political positions, including many not now under civil service. Higher salaries were recommended for the top positions.

"By a career is meant a life work," the commission said in its report. "It is an honorable occupation which one normally takes up in youth with the expectation of advancement, and pursues until retirement. A career service in Government is thus a public service which is so organized and conducted as to encourage careers. A career service system is the aggregation of laws, organization, rules and procedures by means of which the career service is maintained and developed."

The commission said the "ladder" system should supersede minute classification of the public service "into pigeonholes, for which the Civil Service Commission tries to find men who exactly fit each compartment."

Career Basis Benefits Outlined.

Dr. Luther Gulick, secretary of the Commission of Inquiry, and now making studies for the President's and Senate reorganization committees, appeared before the Senate Civil Service Committee last year to indorse the Logan bill for blanketing all Federal jobs into the competitive civil service.

He told the committee the public should "stop thinking of service and the merit system as something which applies only to clerks, stenographers, and the general run of the employes of the Government, and that it must be carried throughout the system."

Outlining his commission's report, he said it is imperative that governmental work be placed on a career basis so that it will become a worthwhile life work, with entrance open and attractive to young men and women of capacity and character, and with opportunity of advancement through service and growth to the higher posts.

"The practical results and implications of a career service program," Gulick said, "will benefit the public through lowered costs and efficient, impartial, and effective service.

"Such a program will benefit the Government worker by offering him an esteemed and honorable career with adequate remuneration and retirement pension, and free him of 'the necessity of political contributions and partisan work.' It will enable the Civil Service Commission to carry on, 'not a negative civil service system, but a positive career system under modern personnel administration.'"

New employes under the plan would undergo a period of probation, after which they would become a member of the career service, removable only for cause. A tribunal governing dismissals, reserving to a competent employe the right of appeal, was suggested.

Significance has been attached to the fact that Louis Brownlow, now chairman of the President's Committee on Administrative Management, and Gulick, a member, both served on the Commission of Inquiry which made these recommendations.

Confidential studies recently made for the President's committee are said to follow in a general way the commission's recommendations, and a thorough airing of the proposals may be expected when Congress resumes.

The seventh article in Mr. Albright's series will appear in The Post tomorrow.

Young Marshal

By Barnet Nover

The Kidnaper of Chiang Kai-Shek.

HE IS NO LONGER so very young and his title of marshal is more reminiscent than real. But Chang Hsiao-liang will no doubt remain "The Young Marshal" to his dying day. For the most important thing about him is that he is the son of the "Old Marshal"—Chang Tso-lin whose life was snuffed out in 1928.

Had it not been for the power he inherited from his father, Chang Hsiao-liang would in all likelihood have been just one of China's Four Hundred Millions. With it, even with only remnants of it, he has been in a position to affect the destinies of his sorely tried nation.

Old Chang was a scholarly looking cutthroat, ruthless and clever. The ruthlessness his son has inherited; his ability hardly at all.

Originally a hung hut-ze or bandit, Old Chang had favorably attracted the attentions of the Japanese about the time of their war with Russia. From then on he was their man and with their aid he became, by 1911, master of Manchuria.

• • • •

BUT EVEN MANCHURIA, a region as large as all of Germany and France combined, could not encompass the ambitions of Chang Tso-lin. South of the Great Wall which divides Manchuria from the 18 provinces of China proper, is the glittering city of Peking which has lured so many other men in the long and convulsive history of China. When the opportunity arose in the turbulent years following the death of Yuan Shi-kai, Chang extended his operations to the south. He had his ups and downs. But following the fantastically complicated wars of the tuchuns (1920-1924) he won the capital.

The prize was a great one. But so was the cost. Chang's military ventures emptied the treasury at Mukden. Increasing taxes were levied on the peasants of Manchuria. When even that revenue proved insufficent, Chang resorted to inflation.

• • • •

Thus it was that while during 1924-1928, Chang Tso-lin dominated all of Manchuria and a good part of North China as well, the structure of his power was full of cracks. In Manchuria his position was being undermined by the growing discontent of the peasants and, what was even more serious, the irritation of the Japanese.

They wanted him to stay home and tend to his Manchurian interests instead of squandering his people's substance in futile wars. And their irritation with him blazed into hatred when, discovering as they had done before him, that it pays to build railroads in Manchuria, he built lines in competition with the Japanese.

At the same time the growth of the Nationalist movement in China after 1925 constituted an even more formidable threat to his power. Indeed, by 1928, as a result of the coalition between Chiang Kai-shek, the Nationalist leader, Feng Yu-hsiang, the so-called "Christian general," and Yen Hsi-shan of Shansi Province, Chang Tso-lin was forced out of Peking. He left for Mukden but when his train arrived there an explosion ended his life. Suspicion exists this explosion was the work of the Japanese.

• • • •

IT IS UNDERSTANDABLE, therefore, why, from the very beginning of his rule as Mauchurian overlord, Young Chang manifested distinct anti-Japanese tendencies. He made peace with the Nationalists whom his father had scorned. And he agreed to fly the blue and white flag of the Nationalist Party over the public buildings in Manchuria. But he never permitted Nanking to interfere with Manchuria and continued to prohibit the establishment of Nationalist Party branches in that region.

The young marshal's ambitions were more circumscribed, geographically, than his father's had been. But within Manchuria itself it was boundless. What he hoped to do was nothing less than eliminate all foreign interests—particularly Russian and Japanese as well as consolidate all power in the purely Chinese districts in his hands.

It would have been a difficult task if undertaken in the best of times and by a far abler person than young Chang. Attempted by Chang at a time of world depression, it soon proved hopeless. He did show that he would brook no rivalry from any would-be overlord when he had Yang Yu-ting, his father's lieutenant, executed. Rumor has it that when he heard Yang was conspiring against him, he invited his enemy to a banquet and after wining and dining him turned him over to a firing squad. But he was not so successful with the Russians and later with the Japanese.

• • • •

HIS EXPULSION of the Russians from control of the Chinese Eastern Railway led to disaster. Some months after Chang's coup, the Russians began to move into Manchuria from Siberia. They were unopposed. The young marshal had no desire to risk his precious private army. The Japanese watched the situation with considerable interest. Two years later it was their cue. On the night of September 18, 1931, they entered Mukden, seized Chang's famous arsenal, the largest in China, his silver hoard and his palaces and soon extended their control over all of Manchuria. Their advance was practically unopposed. Chang moved his army into Jehol; later into North China. A warlord without an army is meaningless.

For the last two years he has been, in a real sense, a pensioner of Chiang Kai-shek, even though holding the flamboyant title of vice commander of the Chinese armies. The 150,000 men under his command had been impotent to stop the march of the Japanese; they could, nonetheless, play a part in that Chinese chess game in which regiments are pawns.

But Chang Hsiao-liang showed no real stomach for fighting against the Reds on the Kansu border. In desolate Shensi he yearned for the fleshpots of Mukden. No wonder, then, that in an effort to get back he was not unwilling to ally himself with the Red army forces he was presumably fighting and by taking Chiang Kai-shek prisoner when the latter needlessly exposed himself, try and get Nanking to do for him what he had been unable to do himself—expel the Japanese from Manchuria. In any case, Chiang was worth a king's ransom.

Like most weak men, the young marshal is brutal. The fate of Yang Yu-ting proves that. There is a real possibility, therefore, that the same fate may be meted out to Chiang Kai-shek. For China that would be an unmitigated tragedy. With all his faults, and they are not inconsiderable, Chiang has been the greatest unifying force in China during the last 25 years. His disappearance would leave a gap that could not easily be filled. It might very easily lead to a new struggle for power among rival warlords which would provide Japan with its long-awaited chance to secure that hegemony over China it has long sought to bring about.

Young Chang as the potential executioner of Chiang may also be the potential executioner of China's reviving hopes of unity. Would be an ironic circumstance if, as the Japanese report, he has now been made the prisoner of his allies, even as he made Chiang his prisoner. But it would not be the first time that the young marshal has been hoist by his own petard.

In Path Of St. Paul

By William Lyon Phelps

Book By Morton.

That one of the most brilliant and accomplished of all living journalists should write a book on this theme is a matter for universal rejoicing. Whenever one visits London, one sees on the street buses the name of a newspaperman in large letters: H. V. Morton, for he writes a delightful column regularly.

In his book which appeared some years ago called "In Search of England," he wrote the perfect guide for the tourist. He followed up that initial success with "In Search of Scotland" and "In Search of Ireland." No one should visit any or all of these three countries without taking along Morton's books.

• • • •

Then he went to Palestine and wrote a charming work called "In the Steps of the Master."

But the new book, "In the Steps of St. Paul," is really the most important, because it is concerned with the earlies: documents we have about the Christian religion. Mr. Morton, the trained observer, the first-class journalist, has followed St. Paul on every one of his missionary journeys, in every place in Asia that he saw, and then on the epoch-making and supremely important journey to Europe, which changed the civilization of the world.

Treaty-Voiding Scored by Eden In Amity Plea

Speech Believed Aimed at Germany Bids Nations to Co-operate.

By the Associated Press.

London, Dec. 14.—British Foreign Secretary Anthony Eden, in a speech addressed mainly to Germany, called for a halt tonight in denunciation of treaties by any one nation and urged the world to "turn from armaments competition to economic co-operation."

"If Europe is to be littered with scraps of paper in 1936," Eden said, "and thereafter nobody can look ahead with any confidence, • • • the foreign policy of our country must work for a comprehensive settlement."

(His reference to the "scraps of paper" was interpreted as especially directed at Germany, which this year denounced two clauses of the Versailles post-war treaty, after previously violating other sections.)

Turning to the Spanish civil war and the Franco-British effort to mediate the struggle, Eden said:

"The United States Government has issued a message of sympathetic support for our endeavors. In doing so they have set an admirable example to other nations more directly concerned, whose responsibilities in this matter are heavier."

Fidelity May Issue Certificates Soon To Its Depositors

Depositors in the Fidelity Building & Loan Association may be paid receiver's certificates before Christmas, it was learned yesterday. These certificates are negotiable and may be sold for cash, or retained, according to the depositor's wishes.

The Federal Home Loan Bank, which entered the tangled affairs of the closed bank a fortnight ago, has not yet finished its survey and no recommendation as to the bank's future will be forthcoming from that agency for a few days. One is expected shortly, however.

When the survey is completed, a plan will be submitted to the Comptroller General in the Treasury, who has control of District banks. The comptroller will then weigh the Home Loan's plan against other plans and make a decision. Either the bank will be permanently closed and the depositors paid off at so much on the dollar, or be reorganized and reopened for business.

In the former event, receiver's certificates will be issued at once. It is therefore possible that the 18,000 depositors may have something negotiable in their hands by Christmas, if the bank is to be closed.

The Home Loan agency, however, is known to be opposed to liquidation and favors reopening the bank. If its report offers a strong plea for reopening, and the Home Loan plan is adopted by the Treasury, several more weeks will pass before any deposits are available for withdrawal.

Tydings Heads Group to Plan Antietam Rites

Fete on 75th Anniversary of Civil War Conflict to Be Held Sept. 12.

By the Associated Press.

A commission of seven members named to arrange for the seventy-fifth anniversary celebration of the Battle of Antietam, Md., organized yesterday, electing Senator M. E. Tydings, of Maryland, as chairman.

Representative David J. Lewis, of Cumberland, was named vice chairman, and Park W. T. Loy, Hagerstown, president of the Washington County Historical Society, was chosen secretary-treasurer.

Other members are Senators George L. Radcliffe, of Maryland, and Harry F. Byrd, of Virginia; Representative Charles Plumley of Vermont, and Adjut. Gen. Milton A. Reckord of Maryland.

The Antietam celebration will be held near Sharpsburg, Md., the week of September 12, 1937.

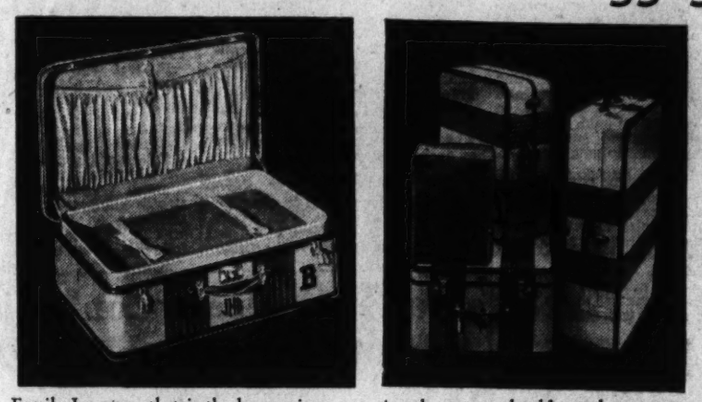

Senator Tydings announced President Roosevelt would be asked to attend and speak at the exercises.

The Maryland Senators and Representative Lewis plan to introduce a bill in the next Congress authorizing the minting of not less than 25,000 fifty-cent pieces commemorating the celebration.

The group which organized yesterday took the name of "National Antietam Commemoration."

Blast Inquiries Start; Senator's Daughter Hurt

Police, Gas Firm Study Explosion; Mrs. Bean's Condition Critical.

Two independent investigations last night sought solution to a mysterious gas blast which yesterday ripped 20 feet of brick wall from an apartment house at 3516 W place northwest, demolished a second-floor apartment and injured critically Mrs. Beatrice Bean, 23-year-old daughter of Senator Edward R. Burke, of Nebraska.

While Mrs. Bean, bride of six months, hovered between life and death at Georgetown Hospital, police and Washington Gaslight Co. officials, unable to explain the accident, searched wreckage at the explosion scene for possible clews.

Residents of the community for blocks around were shaken by the blast. Occupants of the apartment house, terrified by the detonation, fled to the street. Mrs. M. M. McNutt and her 3-year-old daughter, Sarah Ann, who live in an apartment directly beneath the Beans', were injured slightly when buried under falling plaster.

Clothing Afire.

Mrs. Bean, her clothing afire, was dragged from the debris by L. E. Casher, 3507 W place, and Joseph Tomkkins, occupant of a first floor apartment in the building. Casher was burned about the hands and arms.

Physicians held little hope for the injured woman's recovery. At her beside last night were Senator and Mrs. Burke and the bridegroom husband Louie Don Coiner Bean, an employe of the Census Bureau.

According to police reports, Mrs. Bean was discovered on the kitchen floor, her head and shouders resting on three pillows. The pillows and her flimsy house dress were in flames, investigators said. Her rescuers were forced to smash open the apartment door to gain entrance.

Windows Smashed.

Repercussions from the explosion smashed windows, jarrend adjacent homes, buckled plaster in the apartment house hallways and even ripped the downstairs lobby door from its hinges.

Casher, his attention attracted while eating breakfast at his home across the street, was first to reach the scene.

He was joined by Tompkins and together they battered their way through. A swinging door into the kitchen was splintered and jammed. Casher was forced to crawl through a small opening to reach Mrs. Bean.

With flames licking at her head and face, she was unconscious in front of the gas stove. Four jets on the range were open, Casher told police. None were burning.

Partition Undamaged.

Although the living room wall, 2 feet thick with brick exterior, was blown out, a wooden kitchen partition was not disturbed. Investigators believed the swinging door opened by the pressure, permitted full force of the blast to leave the tiny kitchen.

Officials expressed a theory that the two-room apartment "must have been crammed with gas to cause such an explosion." But how the gas became ignited could not be explained.

Mr. and Mrs. Bean were married last June in Rockton, Ill. They came here soon after. At that time, Bean was employed by the United States Public Health Service. He later was transferred to the vital statistics division of the Census Bureau.

Gus Gennerich's Rites Tomorrow

On the President's train, arriving here tonight from Charleston, S. C., will be the body of Gus Gennerich, Mr. Roosevelt's bodyguard since the President took office in March, 1933.

A simple funeral service will be held tomorrow morning in the east room of the White House for the loyal Secret Service agent, who died in a Buenos Aires cafe of heart disease early this month.

With the President, Mrs. Roosevelt, Cabinet members and several Congressmen as mourners, the service will be conducted by the Rev. Dr. G. E. Lensky, pastor of Grace Lutheran Church, Washington.

World Bank Head Quits.

Basel, Switzerland, Dec. 14 (AP).—Dr. L. J. A. W. Beyen, of Rotterdam, now vice president.

Mistletoe Shortage Reported, but Osculators In Capital Will Continue to Practice the Art

Origin of Man's 'Right to Neck' Under Parasitic Plant Is Vague.

By Eugene Warner.

A shortage of mistletoe, the plant of yulitide romance, is reported in Washington. While this situation is considered grave by English servants working here, it is not believed that kissing as a pastime will be noticeably affected among Capital kissers over the holidays. Not, anyhow, so long as the juniper berry flourishes in essence form, in quaint vials and bottles.

Just why a man is entitled to kiss a maid when she happens to step under a sprig of the gray-green little plant is not to be ascertained in the most learned of encyclopedias nor volumes of ancient lore. It is just an old-mannish custom.

As a matter of fact, considerable kissing has been done in Washington without mistletoe. numerous cases have been reported, and it is believed by students of the subject that the kissing will contiue, even though the drought cut the mistletoe crop below the usual yield. It is also believed the kissing will be quite as pleasurable without it as with. The drought side did not affect the kissing crop.

The effects of the shortage, seem to be at the commercial, not the romantic end. In Oklahoma, for instance, the mistletoe center of the United States, where the little parasitic plant is the official State floral emblem, gatherers of mistletoe have been deprived of a nice income by the shortage.

Mistletoe provided revenue to many farm families. Gathering mistletoe in the State where a solemn territorial Legislature officially recognized the flora in 1893, is for the most part a non-professional pursuit. Farmers shinny up trees from the branches of which the parasite grows, tear it away from the mother tree, and cart it to town, where it brings an average price of $4 per 100 pounds.

Kisses at Low Cost.

Scientists have tried to compute the number of kisses in $4 worth of mistletoe and have come to the startling conclusion that kisses so obtained are obtained at very low cost per kiss. This no doubt accounts for the popularity of the custom in Scotland. It is estimated there are at least ten kisses to each sprig of mistletoe and 1,000 sprigs in 100 pounds, which makes 10,000 kisses for $4. This is considered much less expensive than night clubs, and a great saving in addition thereto in the matter of argument, time spent coaxing and prolonged preliminaries which often leave the subject disinterested by the time his objective is attained.

The Greeks in ancient days celebrated kissing the year around, but especial attention was paid the matter on or about December 21, in a period known as the solstice, which roughly corresponds to our mistletoe period. The Greeks were not observing any Christian feast day, but merely the turning of winter toward spring, for after December 21 the days grow longer and the evil of long nights begins to wane.

Romans likewise observed this period under the name Saturnalia and are said to have done a very good job of it. Any dictionary will tell you what Saturnalia means, and not the astrological definition either.

But mistletoe really came into its own in the cold, cold North country of the Druids, those venerable robed gentlemen with long white beards who wander through Wagnerian operas. The Druids used to hang a sprig of mistletoe on their doors as an offering to the forest gods. This followed a serious oversight on the part of the Druids when they lined up everything that "springs from fire, air, earth and water" on the side of Balder (the love god) against Loki (the fire god). Everything pledged allegiance to the love god except the mistletoe, which, because it was so insignificant, wasn't asked. A bad mistake. Love in that day and ever since thus was vulnerable.

Love Slain by Mistletoe.

Loki fashioned an arrow of mistletoe and shot Balder with it, or, rather, got a friend of his, a blind god, to do the act. The blind man shot straight and true and Balder was knocked off, an artillery phenomenon which has baffled trajectory experts ever since. Love, it seems, was slain by mistletoe. From that time on the Druids did not treat the mistletoe so discourteously, but signed up to carry the torch for love. Everyone who passed beneath it received a kiss to show it was the emblem of love, not death.

Many centuries after the Druids and Norse gods, the kissing of a person under the mistletoe became an accepted custom in Merrie England. The custom originated, so they say, in the servant halls of medieval castles. However, there is nothing to confirm the theory that servants had a monopoly on kissing, nor that they needed any excuse such as a sprig of a parasitical plant. In all events, the practice of kissing under the mistletoe had no trouble invading the feast halls of the lord and the cottage of the vassal, and was thoroughly enjoyed by all.

Today the mistletoe from its strategic point on the chandelier is the faint excuse that people require for letting themselves be natural. It is, perhaps, because of its hallowed history, accepted as the magic token of romance which casts overboard reserves, teachings and conventions, unique in a world roped and bound by inhibitions. Everybody seems to be in favor of it, but only at Christmas do they do anything about it. It's a shame about the shortage, but perhaps the spirit of mistletoe will prevail despite all. There are stronge indications that it will.

Trial Jury Hears Confession In 16th Street Robbery-Death

How Norman W. Robinson, colored, formerly a janitor, allegedly confessed the robbery and murder of Mrs. Florence Goodwin, well-to-do proprietress of a fashionable Sixteenth street rooming house, was told yesterday by Lieut. John Fowler and Detective Sergt. Aubrey Tolson, as Robinson's trial on a first-degree murder charge began in District Supreme Court.

The officers said the colored man, who signed a statement convicting himself some time after the crime, told them he entered the dwelling and crept up to the room of the victim. When she discovered him, they testified he admitted, he clubbed her to death with a poker, put the poker back in place, and ran home.

So swiftly did the trial progress yesterday that Robinson may know his fate today—whether he is to die in the electric chair, or whether the jury will decide that he is simply a young colored man tricked into signing a statement admitting the crime.

Irvin Goldstein, assistant U. S. attorney, said late yesterday that the Government has only one more witness to present before concluding its case.

He is Dr. Richard Rosenberg, whose testimony is expected to be a high light in the trial. Twice he was used by police as the "victim" in a graphic re-enactment of the slaying, with Robinson taking the part of the killer.

Next day, Robinson was arrested. After police held him incommunicado for six days, found blood-spattered clothing in his room in the 1400 block of Ninth street northwest, they questioned him about the killing which occurred September 18.

Police yesterday re-emphasized they had found scrapings beneath the fingernails of Robinson, which, they said, seemed to tally with the skin of the dead woman and with the clothing she wore.

One after another police officers took the stand and reconstructed the murder as they saw it from the evidence they had gathered and from the alleged confession of the defendant.

They said Robinson, once janitor for a time at the Sixteenth street address, entered the house late one night with a duplicate key, went to Mrs. Goodwin's room and surprised her.

When she started, he became terrified, they said, and beat her with the heavy furnace poker. He then ransacked the room, but got nothing of substantial value.

Heirs of Veteran Find $5,800 Hidden

Front Royal, Va., Dec. 14 (AP).—Erastus Compton, Confederate veteran who distrusted banks, died at his home near here yesterday and left at least $5,800 tucked in remote corners of the house and in between leaves of books in his scanty library.

Mr. Compton, one of two remaining veterans of '65 in Warren County, was 91 years old. Funeral services will be held tomorrow afternoon.

His survivors, his widow, four sons and four daughters, found bills of $5, $10 and $20 denominations tucked away in two old desks and in between the leaves of books.

Today, all the money found in the house had been deposited in a bank.

Robles Kidnap 'Lair' Visited by U. S. Jury

Tucson, Ariz., Dec. 14 (AP).—Backtracking the mysterious "X. Y. Z. obey" letter which two years ago led to the release of kidnaped June Robles, Federal grand jurors considering the unsolved case journeyed into the desert today to view the scene of the little girl's dug-out prison.

The jurors traced minutely the 9-mile course outlined in the letter which contained instructions which sent prosecutors to the kidnap lair.

Mother, 45, Bears 21st Child in 30 Years

Benton Harbor, Mich., Dec. 14 (AP). A Benton Harbor factory worker and his wife were parents of their twenty-first child today, following the caesarian birth of a 7½-pound son yesterday to Mrs. Fred Hungerford, 45.

Nineteen of the children are living, the oldest a daughter 30 years old. They include one set of twins, a 4-year-old boy and girl. Hungerford is 55 years old.

Neely's Son Halts Plans for Wedding

Reno, Nev., Dec. 14 (AP).—John Champ Neely, 22-year-old son of United States Senator and Mrs. Matthew M. Neely, of Fairmont, W. Va., said today his announced plans for a second marriage "have been indefinitely postponed."

Young Neely, who obtained a divorce here November 30 from Mrs. Mary Kathryn Faust Neely, had announced he would marry Luetta Sutton, Salem, W. Va., night club entertainer known as Blossom Gay 'before the Christmas holidays."

Declining to comment on the change in plans, Neely said, "I'm going to stay on here in Reno. There'll be no wedding—at least not right away."

Stars Photographed At 2 Sextillion Miles

Pasadena, Calif., Dec. 14 (AP).—The most distant photographs ever taken—two sextillion miles which is 2 plus 21 ciphers—were identified today as 200 nebulae, each as large or larger than the star system to which the sun belongs. The identification was announced in the annual report of the Carnegie Instituiton's Mount Wilson Observatory.

Found by Dr. Edwin F. Hubble, the new cluster has been named Hydra No. 1. Its light required 326,000,000 years to reach the earth.

Ex-Aide at Temple Sues.

Los Angeles, Dec. 14 (AP).—A $30,000 damage suit was filed today by Willedd Andrews, charging Rheba Crawford, former associate pastor of Angelus Temple, and Jacob Moidel, attorney, conspired to coerce Aimee Semple McPherson into discharging him as Temple attorney.

Hermant, Sculptor, Dies.

Chicago, Dec. 14 (AP).—Leon Hermant, 63, a French sculptor, was found dead of heart disease today in his studio apartment. In 1917 Hermant was awarded the Cross of the Legion of Honor by the French government for his monument to Louis Pasteur, in Grant Park here.

French Default War Debt, but Hope for Pact

Note Favors Future Talks, Says Proposals Cannot Be Made Now.

By Sidney Olson.

The French government, regretting "profoundly" its inability to present any concrete proposals at this time for settlement of its $4,081,227,249 war debt to this country, nevertheless significantly stated in a note to the State Department last night it hopes for a reopening of negotiations "with a view to an arrangement acceptable to both nations."

The French note, presented to Acting Secretary of State R. Walton Moore by Andre de Laboulaye, French Ambassador, contained the usual notice of default of the semi-annual installment. It said, in part:

"Therefore, desirous of promising only what it will be able to perform, it regrets profoundly that the distressing economic depression which the country has just undergone and the state of world economic relations do not permit it as yet to present proposals. Such proposals, in view of the disequilibrium of the balance of trade and of the balance of payments, might have an influence on its effect toward recovery and might compromise the beneficial effects of the international monetary understandings in which it has been happy to participate recently.

"It hopes that those co-operative understandings, together with the improvement of world economic conditions and also the triumph of the democratic thesis which it is endeavoring to sustain by the limitation of armaments, will permit it to open through diplomatic channels negotiations with a view to an arrangement acceptable to both countries which would strengthen their bonds of friendship and of confidence to the benefit of the welfare and peace of the peoples."

Of the total French debt to this country, the amount due today totals $22,308,812.22, composed of semiannual interest and unpaid installments.

The French debt to this country is the second largest, ranking next to that of Great Britain. Great Britain served notice of the customary default the other day, and Italy, Poland, Lithuania, Latvia and Hungary served formal notice of default yesterday.

Only Finland is expected to remit its payment today. A total from all countries of $155,093,973 is due today, but the Finnish return of $231,315 is expected to be the only war-debt money actually to pour into the Treasury.

Gen. Chiang Gives $1,000 to Missions

Nashville, Tenn., Dec. 14 (AP).—Mrs. C. W. Turpin, editor of the Secular Press Bureau, announced today Gen. and Mrs. Chiang Kai-Shek, of China, had given $1,000 gold to missionary funds of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

Chiang is the Chinese overlord detained at Sianfu in a coup by mutinous Northern troops.

A cablegram telling of the gift was sent here Saturday from Honolulu by Bishop Arthur T. Moore, who is en route from the Far East to a missionary gathering in New Orleans January 5.

Bar Sets Discussion On Public Defender

The question of a public defender for the District to act as counsel for poor persons accused of crimes will be discussed at a luncheon meeting of lawyers at the Hamilton Hotel today at 12:30 p. m.

The guest of honor and speaker will be Justin Miller, chairman of the Attorney General's advisory committee on crime. The Junior Bar Section of the District Bar Association and Junior Bar Conference of the American Bar Association are holding the luncheon.

Plane Nearly Overturns After Miami-Havana Hop

Havana, Cuba, Dec. 14 (U.P.).—Maj. Alexander P. de Seversky's speedy Miami-Havana flight nearly ended in disaster today when his amphibian plane almost turned over because of tight shock absorbers when it landed at Camp Columbia.

His flying time was announced as one hour 13 minutes 59½ seconds, which he said undoubtedly was a record for an amphibian. Camp Columbia officials said no Miami-Havana record had been set up previously.

Lively Debates Feature Meeting Of University Women's Committee

Legislation Affecting the District Is Outlined by Mrs. Chapin.

Lively debates took place at the meeting of the legislative committee of the National Association of University Women yesterday afternoon when the "pro" and "con" of legislation to be considered at the next session of Congress was discussed. Mrs. Edward A. Chapin, chairman, summarized the legislation which will affect the District of Columbia.

One of the most important measures discussed was the proposed 40-hour law for women in the District which was emphatically opposed by Mrs. Harvey W. Wiley. Miss Mary Robinson, of the women's bureau, Department of Labor, explained the objects of this bill. Mrs. Henry Graitan Doyle, president of the Board of Education, spoke on pending educational measures. Other topics discussed were the repeal of the "red rider," juvenile court legislation, and the District of Columbia school appropriation bill.

Miss Ruth Winifred De Voe was hostess at tea, assisted by Miss Ellen L. Anderson, Miss Barbara Brown, Mrs. Gilbert A. Bell, Mrs. Willard Garner, Mrs. Thomas A. Groves, Miss Alice Jewell, Miss Mary Voccaro, Miss Imogene Zook, and Mrs. Francis Williams.

The Christmas motif was in evidence last night when the Alumnae Chapter of Kappa Beta Pi, International Legal Sorority, met at the home of Mrs. Grace Knode Vickers. There was a Christmas tree and gifts for each guest.

A program of music was given by Miss Louis Glass, pianist, and Mrs. Gilbert E. Hyatt, jr., soloist, accompanied by Miss Glass. The program committee included Mrs. Grace S. Dawson, chairman; Mrs. Vickers, Mrs. Verna Parsons Young, Mrs. Norma Britten and Miss Elna Anderson.

Petworth Women's Club.

Many members of the Woman's City Club gathered last night for the dinner of the French section. Mme. Fellan Garzia spoke on French literature. Miss Roberta Tull, chairman of the French section, was hostess.

The bridge section met yesterday afternoon with Mrs. William C. McSparren as the hostess.

Petworth Women's Club.

The music and literature section of the Petworth Woman's Club met at the home of Mrs. C. L. Blake last night. Mrs. Blake was assisted by Mrs. F. B. LeFever and Mrs. J. B. Waldo. Mrs. F. J. McMaugh was in charge of the Christmas program. A paper on "Handel" was read by Miss Lydia Widmyer. A program of music was presented by Miss Artis Atkinson, choir director of the Petworth Methodist Church.

Christmas Party Held.

Many business and professional women motored out to the sylvan studio of Blanche Morgan Foote last night to attend a Chirstmas party.

Mrs. Foote, chairman of the Business and Professional Woman's Club health committee, was the hostess, assisted by Miss Laura V. D. Hanson, chairman of the program committee of the club. Christmas carols were sung.

Zeta Tau Alpha Alumnae.

The Washington alumnae chapter of Zeta Tau Alpha, women's national Panhellenic fraternity, will be hostess at the annual Christmas party for the George Washington University chapter and the alumnae in Washington, Thursday night, at the home of Miss Betsy Watkins and Mrs. Mary Lee Watkins, 309 Cumberland avenue, Somerset, Md. The Christmas party is given every year to collect toys and gifts to be sent to the fraternity's philanthropic project, a health center located at Currin Valley, Va.

Assisting the Misses Watkins as hostesses for the party will be Miss Blair Anderson and Miss Margaret Mulhausen.

Delta Delta Delta Luncheon.

The Washington Alliance of Delta Delta Delta will hold its annual Christmas luncheon on Saturday, December 19, at the A. A. U. W. at 1:30. Each member is asked to bring a top suitable for a small girl or boy, as the Alliance is taking care of a family of six children this Christmas. Any Tri-Delta in Washington during the holiday season is welcome to attend the luncheon. Mrs. Edward Horton, Emerson 5409, is in charge of arrangements.

Mrs. Harvey Wiley Leads Opposition to 40-Hour Law for Women.

Mrs. Morrison to Entertain.

Mrs. Catherine McReynolds Morrison will entertain members of the Washington Alumnae Chapter of Alpha Chi Omega at a luncheon and musicale in her home, 1327 Gallatin street, today, at 1 o'clock, assisted by Mrs. Meredith Woods. The program will be presented by Miss Gertrude Effenbach, a pupil of Alexandre Skalevski, head of the piano department of Peabody Conservatory.

Mrs. Morrison is the founder and director of the Young Pianists Club of Washington, and has been associated for many years with the Music Teachers' Association, by whom she was honored at a dinner Monday evening. She was initiated into Alpha Chi Omega two years after Alpha Chapter was founded, and has been actively participating in its interests ever since.

Sneezes Cured, Margaret Cleer Coming Home

Spasm Ended as Strangely as It Began, Baffled Doctors Declare.

Mary Margaret Cleer, the "sneeze girl," is at last temporarily cured and coming home today, Johns Hopkins Hospital authorities said last night in Baltimore.

After two weeks of treatment at the famous medical institution, where she was taken by The Washington Post, her sneezing apparently has been cured. However, doctors have frankly stated they do not know what caused the peculiar seizures, which began October 9 and continued for almost two months.

The 13-year-old girl, happy as a lark at her recovery, was no whit happier than her father and mother, who almost wept with joy last night when told their daughter could come home.

Thomas Cleer, $18-a-week gasoline station attendant, will borrow his boss' car this morning and drive to Baltimore. At home will be waiting Mary Margaret's three brothers and sisters and her mother, Beulah, on tiptoe with excitement.

The little girl entered Johns Hopkins two weeks ago today, after sneezing all the way to her hospital bed. In two days the spasms had begun to abate. In a week they had disappeared. She began to gain some of the 40 pounds she had lost.

Since then her recuperation has been rapid. Her cheerfulness has returned and the despair which she felt has gone. Now she is full of energy and anxious to get back to Washington and Lee High School, certain the sneezes have gone to stay.

The case is unique in medical history—as baffling in its end as in its beginning. What caused the sneezes, scientists confess they don't know. What stopped them they also confess they don't know.

It is assumed, but only an assumption, that some mysterious factor in her home conditions caused the spasms. Her return home will test that theory.

4 Small Girls, Fleeing School, Are Recaptured

Four girls, the oldest 15, ended their hitch-hiking flight from St. Mildred's Academy, Laurel, Md., in a house at the outskirts of Baltimore yesterday when a "nice lady" took them in and notified Washington relatives.

Reported missing late Sunday, the youngsters said they were "dissatisfied" with school life and decided to run away. City and State police were soon on their trail, however, and after the long trek from Laurel the girls readily agreed to return to classes.

All from Washington, the runaway quartet was composed of Catherine Simon, 10, 1922 N street northwest; Virginia Paul, 15, 3025 Fifteenth street northwest; Barbara Wallace, 14, 2019 I street northwest, and Barbara Beasley, 10, 1900 block of First street northwest.

The flight "plot," according to the girls' story, was hatched Friday night. And Sunday, during an outdoor play hour, the youngsters slipped unnoticed into nearby woods and made their way to the Washington-Baltimore boulevard. A motorist took them to Baltimore.

Reaching the city limits soon after dusk, they started a house to house canvass for food. At the home of Mrs. Catherine Sheahan, 810 Washington boulevard, they were invited in to spend the night.

Meanwhile, police of Washington, Baltimore and Prince Georges County started a search. Alarm spread when the girls failed to appear at relatives' homes here.

With much coaxing and pantry goodies, Mrs. Sheahan, learned the home address of Catherine Simon. Mrs. Margaret Simon, the girl's mother, received a telegram soon after noon yesterday and immediately called police. Last night the girls were either back at school or with their parents.

Barbara Wallace, one of the girls, last June was found trapped in an 18-foot organ pipe at the Metropolitan A. M. E. Church, 1518 M street northwest. Nude and huddled in one end of the organ tube, Barbara was extracted after nearly an hour's work by members of the Fire Rescue Squad. She said she was "running away from someone who was chasing her," and sought the pipe for safety.

appealing figure on the stand, her feet just reaching the floor.

She said she had picked berries with Edith and her mother the day tragedy visited her home.

Gently, his voice lowered, Charles Henry Smith, chief defense counsel, examined the girl.

She said she saw her daddy drinking beer with Dr. Sykes that evening.

"Did he come home for dinner that evening?"

"No, sir."

She said he didn't come home until about 9 or 10 o'clock that night. She said she saw him on the street and pleaded with him to come home.

"Why did you do that?"

"He was drinking."

Mary Catherine said that, later that night, Trigg was in a rage because Edith hadn't returned home

"What did he say?"

"He said a man ought to break her —— —— neck."

Tells of Edith's Return.

Big sister Edith came home about ten minutes after the father's outburst, said Mary Catherine, adding she told Edith that their father had given their mother 30 minutes to get out of the house.

"Edith said no, he's not going to run mommy off," Mary Catherine narrated.

"Daddy said yes, I am going to run her off and I am going to whip you, too."

"Edith said, poppy, you can whip me, but you can't run mommy off."

Edith had to go through Trigg's room to get the quilts for her own bed.

Mary Catherine had to go through Trigg's room to get the quilts for her own bed.

Mary Catherine testified that she heard Edith cry out:

"Poppy, don't stab me with that butcher knife!"

"Mommy and I got out of bed, then we heard the butcher knife fall on the floor.

"When we got in the room, daddy had Edith by the hair.

Threats Related.

"They were struggling around. I heard daddy say, 'Anne look what she's done to me, I'm going to finish her now.'"

"How was your father acting?"

Again little Mary Catherine had to use profanity. "He was a-cussing and yelling the Savior's name.

She said she heard her mother ask her daddy if he was hurt, and she said he said he wasn't.

"He said, if I was hurt I'd go over to Jenkins to the hospital."

Maxwell worked in a coal mine in Jenkins, and was entitled to hospitalization.

Mary Catherine said that her mother bathed the cut on Trigg's head, and then coaxed him to go to bed.

Meantime, she said Edith had run out of the house. When Edith came back in the house, Mary Catherine said, she was crying.

"She said, poppy, I'm going to leave home and make my own way."

Daddy said, "Edith, you've got a good home here" she said, "Oh, poppy, you've promised to be good before, and you've always broken your promise."

"But Edith didn't leave, did she?" Smith asked.

"No, she didn't leave."

"What happened after that?"

"Well, Edith turned on the radio for a minute, daddy yelled, turn off that —— —— radio, and mommy said 'Edith, turn off the radio, Trigg wants to go to sleep.'"

Everybody then quieted down, Mary Catherine said, and tried to get some sleep. Later, she said, she heard her father get up from bed. She said she asked him what was wrong, and he said he was going out to the kitchen to get a drink of water.

"I said, 'I'll get it for you,' and he said, 'No, I have to spit.'"

Crash Heard.

A moment later, they said, they all heard a crash. They thought at first Trigg had stumbled over a chicken coop, but when they heard no other sounds, they went out to investigate.

It was then they saw Trigg Maxwell prostrate on the floor, lying in the kitchen doorway.

Mary Catherine began to cry at this point, dabbing her eyes with a handkerchief.

Edith, who is devoted to her sister, began crying, too.

Mary Catherine stopped crying when she came to the most difficult part of her ordeal—the cross examination by Special Prosecutor Oscar M. Vicars.

Vicars set out to break down Mary Catherine's story, but he got back more than he gave.

"You say you saw your daddy drinking beer with Dr. Sykes?" he asked.

"You didn't mind your daddy taking a glass of beer, did you?"

"I certainly did," Mary Catherine shot back. "If I didn't mind, I wouldn't love my daddy."

She had told how, seeing her daddy getting drunk in a restaurant at the The Pound, she tried to persuade him to go home.

"Was your father talking kindly to you at the time?" Vicars asked.

"Yes," she said, "I guess what made him mad was ——."

"Don't guess," said Vicars.

"Well," Mary Catherine shot back, "common sense will teach you that."

It was nearly 6 o'clock when Mary Catherine was excused from the witness stand. She ran to Edith and they embraced. A short time later, in an ante room, she became hysterical. She was told that she would have to go on the stand again tomorrow morning "Oh, don't let them be mean to me," she pleaded with Defense Counsel Smith.

Good Day for Edith.

Everything considered, this was a good day for Edith Maxwell.

Twice Circuit Judge Ezra T. Carter reversed himself to give opinions in Edith's favor. At the outset of today's session, he said that he had decided to exclude the prosecution's much-discussed ax as evidence.

Defense Counsel Smith early in the day called Isaac Bush, a Norton insurance man, who was ready to testify that Trigg Maxwell talked to him about an insurance policy two days before his death, and that Trigg told him he was afraid that he couldn't pass a physical examination—that he believed he had "either heart trouble or high blood pressure."

Prosecutors Vicars and Greear objected venemently and Judge Carter ruled Bush's testimony was "heresay" and therefore not admissable.

Judge Carter pondered his ruling at lunch time, and on his return admitted to counsel that he had made a mistake.

And so, at the afternoon session, Bush was allowed to tell about Maxwell's fears about heart trouble or high blood pressure.

From the outset, Defense Counsel Smith has contended Trigg Maxwell died, not from the blow which Edith inflicted on his head with a slipper, but from a heart attack brought on by years of heavy drinking and excitement growing out of his quarrel with Edith the night of his death.

This morning Defense Counsel Smith put on a fourth physician to testify Trig Maxwell could not have died as a result of a blow on the head. He was brilliant young Dr. J. B. Hopkins, 27-year-old graduate of the Virginia Medical College of Richmond, who agreed with Coroner A. Magruder MacDonald, of the District of Columbia, that if Maxwell had been dealt a fatal blow on the head he would have suffered a fracture of skull or a concussion of the brain.

Dr. Hopkins said that if there was no skull fracture, Maxwell could only have died from a concussion of the brain if a blow on the head was responsible.

But judging from the autopsy report of Dr. Tudor and Dr. Foust, physicians hired by Lee Skeen, he said that there could not possibly have been a concussion. In case of a concussion, he said, the whole brain would have been damaged.

The mountain doctors, he emphasized, reported they found only two small clots at the vertex of the brain and minute hemorrhages at the base of the brain.

Dr. Hokpins expressed the opinion these damages were caused by one of two things, or both:

The pressure used by the undertaker in embalming Trigg Maxwell's body or the opening of Maxwell's skull by the two doctors.

On top of this, Defense Counsel Smith called William E. Orr, a Virginia State trooper.

He testified Mary Catherine had called him to the Maxwell home the night, or early morning, of the tragedy, saying her daddy was dead.

Anxiety Related.

The prosecution has called witnesses who have testified that Edith seemed unperturbed the night of her father's death.

"You were in the Maxwell home that morning," Attorney Smith asked. "You saw Edith and her mother. What were they doing?"

"They seemed to be heartbroken," said Trooper Orr, "and they were consoling each other."

Attorney Smith asked Orr if he talked to Dr. Sykes, the Maxwell physician, who had been drinking with Trigg earlier that evening and who was called by Edith when Maxwell collapsed.

"Yes, I talked to him," Trooper Orr said.

"What did he say about Maxwell's death?"

"He said he thought it was a natural death."

Consequently, Orr said, he did not make any investigation.

Barber Slays Colleague In Shop, Kills Himself

Greenfield, Mass., Dec. 14 (AP).—One barber shot another to death here today, wounded a second, then killed himself, investigators said. The shooting occurred in the little shop where all worked.

Police Sergt. James J. Burns said Harry Davis, 55, off duty for the day, appeared without warning in the shop, slew Samuel Tullio, 23, and wounded Robert C. Smith before turning the gun on himself. Police tonight said they had uncovered no motive for the shooting.

Music Body's Party Honors Hans Kindler

Conductor—Founder of National Symphony Hears Tributes.

By Jessie Ash Arndt.

Dr. Hans Kindler, whose untiring efforts have made the National Symphony Orchestra possible for the Capital, last night was honored at a testimonial dinner sponsored by the Washington Music Teachers Association. It was given at the Mayflower, where musicians and music lovers joined in paying tribute to the founder and conductor of the orchestra.

Mrs. Hugo William Hasselbach, president of the Music Teachers Association, presided, and was becomingly gowned in green chiffon on which rhinestones formed a glistening design. At her right was Dr. Kindler and beside him, Lotte Lehmann, noted soprano, who is singing tonight with the National Symphony in its Baltimore program and tomorrow afternoon at its Constitution Hall concert here. She came yesterday especially to attend the dinner and was welcomed by many friends who for four seasons have enjoyed her concerts on Mrs. Lawrence Townsend's series and will hear her again on February 8.

At Mrs. Hesselbach's left was Mr. Walter Bruce Howe, who acted as toastmaster in the absence of Dr. Carl Engel, prevented by illness from coming from New York.

Mrs. Henry Morgenthau, jr., wife of the Secretary of the Treasury, who spoke in tribute to Dr. Kindler and his contribution to the musical life of the Capital, and the Very Rev. Edmund A. Walsh, S. J., another of the speakers of the occasion, were also in the center

Mr. Howe, as toastmaster, introduced himself as third speaker.

Mrs. Townsend in Group.

Mrs. Townsend, an honorary member of the Music Teachers Association, without whom no musical event in Washington is complete, was also seated there and was wearing gray lace, with corals at her neck.

She had just returned from New York City and was delighting those around her with a description of the wedding of Rosa Ponselle. At her right was Mr. Edwin Hughes and next him, Mrs. Kindler, wearing a frock of black net dotted in white velvet flowers with rhinestone centers, and a necklace of rhinestones.

Others at the head table were Mr. Curtis Rodges, Mrs. Martin Morrison, founder and director of the Washington Pianists' Club, who also is an honorary member of the Music Teachers Association; Mrs. Fannie Armstrong Roberts, Mrs. Paul Tyler, Miss Pearl Waugh and Dr. E. N. C. Barnes.

Artists at Table.

Mr. Percy Lee Atherton, Mrs. Oliver Strunk, Mrs. Matthew John Whitehall, Dr. John Blackstone Wilkins, Mrs. Walter Hilton, Mr. George Minnigerode and the artists of the evening, Miss Vera Covert, her accompanist, Mrs. Dorothy Radde Emery, and Mr. Harry Farbman and his wife, professionally known as Edith Schiller, who accompanied him.

Miss Covert, who is a native Washingtonian, had sung in all the large cities of the United States except her own. She wore a turquoise blue crepe gown with silver accessories, and her singing delighted hearers, as did Mr. Farbman's playing.

Miss Covert, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas F. Murray, of Washington, sings 27 operatic roles, but when at home in her pent-house apartment opposite Carnegie Hall in New York, she devotes her time to a little garden she has planted there.

Mrs. Walter Bruce Howe, whose compositions have been played by the National Symphony on several occasions, entertained a company of guests at her table, including Miss Mabel Boardman, Mr. and Mrs. William Franklin Sands, Mrs. R. H. Dunlap, Mr. Thomas Pearson, Mrs. Melvin Hall, Mr. George H. Myers, Mr. George Gaul and Mr. Olin Dows.

Lieut. Comdr. and Mrs. E. R. Henning were hosts at a cocktail party and later took their guests to the dinner. They included Mr. Nicolai Sokoloff, Col. and Mrs. Armstrong, Mrs. Dorothea Townsend and her guest, Mrs. Glines, who is here from Puerto Rico and is a well-known sculptress; Mr. Lyle Brookover, Mr. Russell Eldridge, and Mr. and Mrs. Wolner. Mrs. Henning was in a gown of white satin, with which she wore gold accessories.

First Issue of the 'Thrift Shop Frolics,' Magazine Of Washington Charity Group, Will Appear Today

Pictured is the staff of "Thrift Shop Frolics" which today will release the first issue of its magazine. Left to right they are Miss Margot Hagner, Miss Nancy Leiter, Mr. Joshua Evans 3d, Mr. Edward Beale McLean, jr., Mr. Gordon E. Brown, Mr. Blair Belles and Miss Margot Garrett. The group was snapped at the home of Miss Leiter at Dupont Circle.

Contents of Periodical Include Editorial by Sir Willmott Lewis, Start of Serial by Margot Garrett; Miss Leiter Entertains for Staff.

By Dudley Harmon.

After several years of notable success in its chosen career of turning trash into cash, Washington's Thrift Shop, under leadership of Mrs. John R. Williams, has entered with great fanfare the world of belles lettres. Launched today on the sea of public opinion is its new magazine, Thrift Shop Frolics, a periodical ranging in contents from an uplifting editorial by Sir Willmott Lewis to the thrilling tale of a hard-hearted debutante by Margot Garrett.

For weeks members of the staff have been struggling over typewriters, business balance sheets and such unfamiliar things as "make-up" in an effort to get the Frolics out on time. They have succeeded admirably with the exception of a Warrenton letter, compiled by Thomas Leiter, which just missed the first issue, but is promised for the second.

Almost Pocket Size.

The new magazine follows the popular anti-bulkiness trend in size and is almost a pocket edition. On the cover, Art Editor Mary McDowell has depicted an intriguing group of objects, including an evening dress and a bird cage, indicative of the variety of things to be found at the Thrift Shop.

In an editorial which, as expected, couldn't be better written, Sir Willmott, Washington correspondent of the London Times, points out the need for individual charity. The approach of Yuletide (only nine more shopping days until Christmas) makes this article especially timely.

Mrs. Ormsby McCammon has contributed several poems, one of which is the interesting story of a neglected doll transported from solitude in a dreary attic to the top of the Christmas tree in the White House, via the Thrift Shop. Other contributors include William A. Bell, jr., Blair Bolles, Howard Wharton, Joshua Evans, jr. and Duff Merrick, who has an article on current trends in the theater.

Short, Short Feature.

In her serial story, "So Drifts the Snow," Margot Garrett, who made her debut last month, shows that she has quite a talent for dialogue and incident. In fact, readers will hardly be able to wait until the next issue to find out whether Ginna, the spoiled darling of the rich, undergoes a change of heart or gets what she deserves for being mean and selfish. If the initials "M. G." under another story stand for Miss Garrett's work, she has also contributed a "short, short," feature with a surprise ending in the O. Henry manner.

Last evening Miss Nancy Leiter, business manager of the magazine, entertained the entire staff of the Frolics at a dinner party at her home on Dupont Circle. Among the guest, besides the above mentioned, were Marguerite Hagner, the advertising manager (and the magazine is literally bursting with ads); Emily Davis, the circulation manager; Mr. Clifford Berryman, the well-known cartoonist, and Edward B. McLean, jr., organizer of the press on which the Frolics was printed.

Gov. Paul McNutt of Indiana and Gov. William Langer of North Dakota returned to their homes yesterday, after attending the sessions of the American Public Welfare Association's convention here.

THE MERRY WHIRL by MARYLYN

With the prospect of several years to be spent in the land of the Soviet, Ambassador Joseph Davies and his very attractive wife thought it wise to expose themselves to some Russian atmosphere before leaving for their new home in Moscow. So—with their friends, the Jesse Joneses, they took themselves to the Troika on Connecticut avenue and had themselves a regular Russian dinner with the accompaniment of whirling dancers in brightly hued costumes, the thrilling flame dagger dancer and the deep throaty chorus.

"Jeffty" O'Connor has introduced something new in the way of "those necessary little touches" for masculine attire. At dinner the other evening, instead of following the age-old custom of having a snowy white handkerchief peeking out of his breast pocket in the prescribed number of points, he had one of a dark rich crimson. Very different, and most pleasing.

He, by the way, had word from Postmaster General Farley, who is returning this week from Ireland. Instead of writing at length about his travels, he merely scrawled across the back of a card—"There's an O'Connor on every corner here."

The Dominican Minister, Senor Andres Pastoriza, and Gen. Juan Arcarate, of the Mexican embassy, frequently ride together. Whenever weather and duties permit a little exercise and escape from the tedious office hours, the two diplomats take themselves across the river to Fort Myer, where their horses await them.

The last time they were out it suddenly became bitterly cold, catching them down on the bridle path near Alexandria. The horses, pepped up by the plunge of the mercury, and their riders anxious to get to warmer spots, a gallop was in order and away.

Two Teas Staged By Mrs. Roosevelt In the White House

Mrs. Roosevelt was hostess at two teas yesterday afternoon in the White House. At 4 o'clock she entertained a few guests informally and at 5 o'clock received the wives of department officials.

In the receiving line with the First Lady were Mrs. Henry Morgenthau, wife of the Secretary of the Treasury; Mrs. Harry H. Woodring, wife of the Secretary of War; Mrs. Homer S. Cummings, wife of the Attorney General; Mrs. W. W. Howes, wife of the Acting Postmaster General and Miss Jennie Moore, sister of the Assistant Secretary of State.

Mr. John Hamilton, chairman of the Republican National Committee, has taken an apartment for the winter at the Carlton Hotel.

The Ambassador of France and Mme. de Laboulaye have as their guests at the embassy M. and Mme. Paul Hazard, who arrived in Washington yesterday afternoon. M. Hazard spoke at the meeting of the Alliance Francaise.

Last evening the Ambassador and Mme. de Laboulaye entertained at dinner in honor of their guests. Covers were laid for 18.

Society Likes Great Huston Performance

Brilliant Throng of 'First Nighters' Sees Othello.

Walter Huston gave his excellent portrayal of Shakespeare's Othello at the National Theater last evening before an audience of appreciative, applauding social leaders. An unusually early one it was, too, people arriving well before curtain time, meeting guests and going in to find seats. There were the usual caravans of pretty young girls from the numerous finishing schools in the Capital.

Among the first to alight from their limousine were the Attorney General and Mrs. Homer S. Cummings. She was wearing a black crepe gown trimmed at the neck and the waist with a touch of scarlet just matching the lining of her long ermine cape. They were joined shortly by the Solicitor General and Mrs. Stanley Reed, the latter wearing a wine velvet wrap with a luxurious white fox collar.

Miss Pauletta Guffey was accompanied by Mrs. Barry Mohun, who was attired in black lace. Miss Guffey and her sister, Miss Ida Guffey, rarely miss a "first night" when they are in town. Miss Ida and another, Mrs. Carroll Miller, are returning within a week or so from a trip to Cuba and Mexico.

Just as there were representatives of the official set in the audience, so were members of the Diplomatic Corps present, among them Mr. J. E. de Sousa Freitas, Second Secretary of the Brazilian Embassy; Mme. Higersberger, attractive sister of Mr. Edward Kulikowski, of the Polish Embassy, who was the guest of Mrs. Francis Whitten, and Mme. Espaillet, who was costumed in smart tweeds and matching accessories.

Others seen were Mr. and Mrs. Luther H. Reicheldtrfer; Mr. and Mrs. John E. Cammack, the latter costumed in an unusual frock of brown tulle; Miss Rose Page in crepe; Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Grosner, the latter's all-white costume having an artistic dash of color in the huge shoulder spray of orchids, and Mrs. Alexander Wolfe, whose black coat was collared in loepard.

U. S. Ambassador To Soviet Honored By Troyanovskys

The recently appointed American Ambassador to Moscow and Mrs. Joseph E. Davies were guests of honor last night at a dinner given by the Ambassador of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and Mme. Troyanovsky at the embassy. Talisman roses and iris were used as decoration on the long table in the banquet hall at which there were places for 50 guests.

They included, in addition to the guests of honor, the Ambassador of Turkey and Mme. Ertegun, the Acting Secretary of State, Mr. R. Walton Moore, and Miss Jennie Moore; the Secretary of Commerce and Mrs. Daniel C. Roper, Senator and Mrs. Millard E. Tydings, the Minister of Albania, Mr. Falk Konitza; the Minister of Lithuania and Mrs. Zadeikis, Representative and Mrs. Sol Bloom, the Secretary to the President and Mrs. Stephen Early, the Assistant Attorney General and Mrs. Robert H. Jackson, the chairman of the Reconstruction Finance Coroporation and Mrs. Jesse H. Jones, the Chief of the Eastern European Division of the State Department, Mr. Robert F. Kelley; the president of the Export-Import Bank and Mrs. Warren Lee Pierson, the Assistant Chief of the Eastern European Division of the State Department and Mrs. Orsen W. Nielson.

Christmas Kodaks

for pictures in black-and-white or full color

THIS year, your gift of a Kodak can carry with it the greatest thrill in amateur photography—the ability to take pictures in full color as easily as those in black-and-white. Two of the fine cameras we're suggesting below are for home movies—the third for "still" pictures. All are exceptional instruments that make truly marvelous gifts. Come in now and let our trained salesmen assist in your selection.

Magazine Ciné-Kodak Loads in three seconds. Insert magazine, close camera cover, "shoot." And you can switch to another film in a jiffy, even if but partly exposed. Effortless loading only one of six new features. Makes full-color movies, too, on Kodachrome Film. With f.1.9 lens, $125.

Ciné-Kodak Eight Brings home movies within reach of almost every one. Easy to use . . . low in cost—it makes 20 to 30 black-and-white scenes on a film costing $2.25, finished, ready to show. Movies at 10¢ a shot! For a few cents more each scene, Kodachrome full-color movies. With f.3.5 lens, $34.50.

Kodak Retina Concentrated photographic versatility . . . lens, Kodak Anastigmat EKTAR f.3.5; shutter, Compur-Rapid—9 speeds. Satin-finish chromium trimmings. Takes five different Kodak Film Magazines—including Kodachrome (full-color) Film. Its needle-sharp black-and-white negatives enlarge beautifully. Price, $57.50.

These are only three of hundreds of fine gift suggestions you'll find here at the store. Come in and look around.

MARY HAWORTH'S MAIL

Young Mother, Twice Briefly Separated From Husband, Wonders If She Should Give Him Another Try.

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I am a young mother in my early twenties, and am employed in a large concern. Here is my problem. My husband and I separated when we had been married less than a year, but when he learned I was taking steps to obtain a divorce, he implored me to give him another chance. This I did. Now we have a son, less than a year old, and again we are having serious trouble. My husband is the same age as I, and has not settled down yet. He wants to go out alone of nights, and he does so, coming in very late, sometimes early in the morning.

• • • •

As we are living in a home which my family provided, I asked him to leave the other night, which he did, without making any financial provision for our maintenance. I called his supervisor and reported this fact. He talked to my husband, and the following evening the latter stopped by and told me he was afraid he was going to lose his job; that he missed the baby, and that he would try to do the right thing if I would take him back. I believe he is infatuated with some other woman at this time, but have no positive proof.

• • • •

I know he still cares for me, though he does not show it. He is a good-looking man and sought after by many women. I know we could be very happy together if he would do the right thing, and of course there is the baby to think of. I know he needs a father's affection and companionship. I really don't know what to do and would appreciate your advice, for I must let my husband have my decision soon. Very truly yours, UNDECIDED.

The Unvarnished Truth.

DEAR UNDECIDED: The unvarnished truth of the matter is that you have nothing to hope for or to depend upon in the way of tolerable existence with such a man. The sooner you disentangle your life from his the better off and happier you will be. If you take him back now, in another year or so you may have another child to add to the complexity and weight of your burden. The fact that he still cares for you and his child is relatively immaterial, inasmuch as he is fundamentally incapable of discharging his responsibilities as a husband and father.

• • • •

No one will deny that any child is happier and better integrated for knowing the affection and companionship of both father and mother, provided both parents are adequate to their vitally responsible roles. But where one parent flagrantly neglects his family responsibilities to the point of visiting constant anxiety and grief on the other parent, his presence in their child's environment becomes a pronounced liability rather than an asset. So don't rationalize what may be your own peculiarly personal emotional dependence upon your husband as a generous consideration for your son's happiness.

• • • •

Failure or refusal to "settle down" has little to do with chronological age. It is fundamentally a matter of character, of willingness and ability to pay one's debt to society as incurred. Your husband has taken a wife, has fathered a child, and therefore, regardless of what his innate preferences might be, for late hours, giddy diversion and flirtatious intrigue, he would penalize and discipline himself to discharge these primary obligations, if he possessed essential manliness.

• • • •

He is a weakling, through and through—as evidenced by the fact that his supervisor's sharp talk and his own subsequent fear that he might lose his job brought him back to whimper for another chance. The old proverb, "You can lead a horse to water, but you cannot make him drink," applies here. You can lead your husband back, time and time again, to a clear and simple picture of what he ought to do and of what he might conceivably do, but you can never compel him to put his hand to the plow and do it years on end.

• • • •

The very wisest thing you can do, in my opinion, is to make this second separation the premise for a final, irrevocable break. You deserve a better helpmeet for the years ahead. M. H.

To Kiss or Not?

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: In order to be popular with boys, does a girl have to let them kiss her whether she likes them or not? I am the sort of girl who won't let a man kiss me unless I really like him. But it seems when I refuse to let a boy kiss me he classes me as "old fashioned" and "goody-goody" and leaves me to my knitting. Why does a boy want to kiss a girl he cares nothing for? I could never comprehend how anyone could kiss someone he didn't love, but this seems to be the vogue.

• • • •

What do you think a young man thinks of a girl who will ask him to kiss her before all the members of their party at a dance? I shall appreciate any information you can give me on these questions, for they have long puzzled me. Sincerely.
HENRIETTA.

Get Boy's Opinion.

DEAR HENRIETTA: Not being endowed with the boy's point of view, I am not prepared to say positively whether or not a girl must suffer herself to be kissed if she wishes to be popular. The next time a boy tries to kiss you, and you are of the opinion there is not sufficient basis for the salute, why not put that question to him? His answer might be unexpectedly enlightening and the resultant conversation might bring both of you to a much better understanding of each other, of the boy-and-girl relationship in general, and might also cause him to forget all about wanting to kiss you—for the time being, at least.

• • • •

There seems to be something a bit contradictory about your probings and conclusions, I might add. For instance, you say you are not the sort of girl who won't let a man kiss you unless you really like him; then add that when you refuse a kiss the solicitor thereof classifies you as "old fashioned" and "goody-goody" and leaves you to your knitting. Well, if you don't like him well enough to kiss him, why should you care if he drops out of the picture, or how he classifies you?

• • • •

I suppose it is curiosity to know how she will respond or react which prompts a boy to kiss—or try to kiss—a girl he doesn't especially care about. I dare say a man would have mixed thoughts concerning a girl who asked him to kiss her before all the members of their party at a dance. He would probably think she was a little silly, but perhaps delightfully and excusably so (since he was the one she made the scene over); he might also be a little flattered and subconsciously pleased with her for offering such a public testimonial to his magnetism; and he might secretly admire her for having the dash, abandon, spirit, unself-consciousness—or call it what you will—to suit her action to her wish, regardless of the setting.
M. H.

New 'Pinch-Punch' Hat Can Go Anywhere

The "pinch-punch" hat shown above can be worn at least four different ways—adjusted to suit any face and can be rolled up and crammed into any suitcase. The grosgrain ribbon fastens with a snapper and can be changed to match costume accessories.

'Inverted Height' Innovation in Midseason Hats Lends Relief From That High-Peaked Treatment

By Ethel Ehlen,
The Post Fashion Editor.

IF YOU are weary looking at high-peaked, skyscraper hats, here is good news. Many of the new hats designed for cruise and resort wear, but which are also suitable for town, are appearing in a new and different silhouette. One group includes a novel crown treatment called the "inverted height," shown particularly in flat sailors, which are shallow-crowned and given depth with a low back trim.

Outstanding in this classification is a model called "legionnaire." It is a tricky black sailor with crown of belting, a brim of straw, flag-red cord trim and low belting trim in back—after the manner of back veils worn on kepis by the foreign legionnaires.

Another interesting group features the classic white, being adapted for town wear everywhere now—for afternoon and informal evening, in felt and velour. These are both small, of the turban and toque versions, and larger types, of the casual or vagabond varieties. Brilliant greens, navy blue and wine are leading colors. Pastel hats with dark bands are a new note in mid-season hat styles, and are accented by dark accessories for the costume.

Casual hats created for resort wear, but which are being purchased by those who must remain and brave the winter winds, are not only new and chic in their styling, but fashioned so they can be worn about a half-dozen ways. Take one of the flat sailors—the brim may be turned up at the sides, back or in front, or worn down all around; the crown may be punched into various shapes also. These are fine for traveling, as they may be rolled into a ball and placed in one corner of the traveling bag without suffering damage.

Featherweight kid is a new medium for gay little hats, replacing the heavier antelope. Snug toques with flat flower trimming of the same material poised in front are particularly clever. They are appearing in bright red, white and grayed tones. Some have winged effects at the sides, with grosgrain ribbon trimming and chenille veils. Not only are novel designs introduced, but for added interest, many of the hats are named in accordance with their styling—such as "happy landings" and "flying down to Rio."

Straws are either very shiny or very rough. A new pebbly woven texture straw called birch-bark is particularly effective. For persons staying in town for the winter, straw, combined with felt, is the usual choice. These usually have felt crowns with straw brims of varying widths and designs; some are of felt with straw trimming in unique designing. Black is the leading color for chapeaux in this category, with all dark tones next in popularity.

A WOMAN'S NEW YORK

By Alice Hughes

New York, Dec. 14.

SEVERAL MONTHS ago I published a solemn warning, in these dispatches from the Manhattan shopping front, that a sinister move was afoot to turn this into a brown Christmas. Few, probably, heeded me. They went blithely on about their business, only pausing to mutter, "There she goes again—the consarned alarmist!" And today I have the melancholy satisfaction of saying "See?"

ALICE HUGHES.

For Mr. Howard Ketcham, who hatched this plot against the time-honored red and green color-scheme for the great feast, has done his dastardly work well. One of the greatest of Fifth avenue's stores has windows filled with these brown cellophane Christmas trees, hung with copper balls, and they are selling well on the main floor. The tree foliage is made of tiny brown cellophane straws. The coppered glass ornaments are turned out over the river in Brooklyn by the Heidt Glass Works, manufacturers of the most of the tree ornaments made in this country. America manufactures only 1 per cent of those used!

The break with tradition goes even farther. Oh, these restless Moderns! Another mighty Avenue shop has kicked out the holly and evergreen and has decorated the store in blue and silver—pretty, but is it Christmas? And even this isn't the worst. The stores are actually glamoring up Santa Claus! I have seen several in the stores whose beards are not white, but platinum-blonde—and their bulky torsoes have been slenderized!

What in the jiminy are we coming to? Poor holly, poor fir-tree, poor mistletoe, poor old Sandy Claws! The impious hands of these Dithering Days lie heavy upon you! Let's not even give presents! Let's be adult!

• • • •

GIRL ABOUT TOWN—Winifred Lenihan, who created the role of Shaw's, "St. Joan" in America, returned from a six-year retirement recently to play the lead in something called "Black Limelight." And the show folded and faded away in about two weeks! Oh, a great life, the theater! Ask Winnie! . . .

• • • •

One of our lady authors is about to collect the biggest fee that Hollywood has ever paid for movie rights to a children's book. The lucky penwoman is Muriel Denison, whose "Susannah, a Little Girl of the Mounties," has been bought for Shirley Temple. Good goin' Muriel! . . .

• • • •

Christmas shopping I'm not going to do—a ducky caviar-cooler of crystal and silver. If my guests don't like their fish-eggs faintly warmed on the way to the table, why let 'em eat rye bread! . . .

• • • •

Local hosts and hostesses practically knock themselves unconscious trying to think up ways and means to pep up their cocktail parties. It seems mere alcohol isn't enough any more, and the parties die on 'em. But Frazier Jelke caused one of these veritable furors by having two pretty Gypsy gals, Nubi and Sari, circulate telling fortunes at his gathering. The alleged Gypsies stole the show, and prophesied for 200 people.

• • • •

Erskine Gwynne, blithe spirit in our social night life, has just set up a new and unenviable record as a hot spot proprietor. He opened a gilded little night club called the Boulevardier on Thursday. On Friday it closed. Modern Broadway couldn't top that for speedy, painful death! . . .

• • • •

Libby Holman, the season's chief target for autograph-mice, and noted in all the gay spots, is studying voice and dramatics with a view to resuming her stage career, interrupted by the Reynolds tragedy. But no more musical shows for her, Libby tells me—no more moanin' low! Just straight drammer, thank you kindly!

• • • •

Helena Rubinstein has just opened a seven-floor beauty salon on Fifth avenue, ablaze with costly objets d'art and equally fancy beauty treatments. It's the last word. Almost next door is the famed atelier of Elizabeth Arden, rich, rare, lavish. My pet dream is to open an old-time, messy "beauty parlor" between these two cosmetic queens, staff it with peroxide blondes with gold teeth, and call it "The Dump." And I'll bet I'd do business, too. We girls can stand just so much richness. A reaction is due!

Dancing Self-Taught

"HOW DIVINELY you dance," Ken whispers. So does every other boy who dances with Dorothy. She smiles graciously—and keeps her secret that she learned at home from simple diagrams for waltz, fox trot, tango and rhumba.

Then she learned clever variations like the rock step diagrammed here. It's done to one measure of music, while you count 1-2-and-3. Step forward with left foot, count 1; forward with right, count 2; shift weight back to left without moving feet, count AND; shift weight forward again to right, count 3.

Dorothy smoothly follows any partner, no matter what his style. Because she balances gracefully on the balls of her feet, she's ready to take off in any direction. Through her hand resting on her partner's shoulder, she feels which way he plans to go.

Her long, swinging backward steps keep her toes well out of her partner's way. She's careful not to take the lead away from him by leaning backward when she steps backward, as may girls do.

Our 40-page booklet, Social Dancing Self-Taught, teaches you how to lead firmly or follow gracefully. Easy instructions, simple diagrams for all modern dances.

Send 15c for booklet, Social Dancing Self-Taught, to The Washington Post, 109 West Nineteenth street, New York, N. Y. Write plainly your name, address and the name of booklet.

Soap and Water Remove Fingermarks on Wood

The fingermarks and smudges that are the bane of the fashionable light-painted doors and moldings and window sills are easily removed with soap and water and a soft cloth. Before oiling and polishing flocks, it is wise to wipe the surface with a damp cloth wrung out of warm soap suds; otherwise the surface dust will mix with the oil and, after repeated treatments, will result in ugly darkening of the natural wood.

Flower Freshener.

Poinsettias will not wear well on a gown unless properly prepared. To keep the sap inside the stem and delay wilting dip it in hot water or sear with a hot iron.

Child's Cleaning Sets Are Ideal Christmas Gifts

Housecleaning sets for children are Santa Claus' latest inspiration. These miniature sets contain all the paraphernalia for thorough housecleaning—scrubbing brushes, mops, carpet sweepers and polishing cloths, the latest in efficient window-washing brushes and what not. There are even small packages of soap products and cakes of soap and packages of washing powders scaled conveniently to tiny hands.

Today's HEALTH TALK

By Dr. Irving S. Cutter.

When Tobacco Reduction Is Needed.

The widespread use of tobacco as a sedative, a stimulant, or a nerve quieter has elicited many inquiries as to the methods that may be adopted to allay an excessive desire for the weed.

Now and then physicians are called upon to advise a patient that, temporarily at least, he should stop smoking. While this can be done, and is done without a compensating factor, nevertheless it involves something of a struggle on the part of the victim. Sucking air through a goose quill in lieu of smoking a pipe of fragrant tobacco is a rather poor subterfuge. It is comparable to replacing one's favorite oolong of orange pekoe with "cambric" tea.

May Upset Digestion.

We know that some persons use too much tobacco. Persistent addiction may upset digestion, interfere with the absorption of food, and affect the nervous mechanism governing the heart beat. It is no uncommon sequel to have an irregular heart resume its normal rhythm on reducing the consumption. No one can deny that nicotine is a poison, but tobacco varies considerably in the percentage of this alkaloid. If smoke is inhaled routinely more of this substance is retained.

As is well known, the body will establish a tolerance to many drugs, among them nicotine. Some of us recall our first essay at smoking grandfather's pipe. If we persisted long enough nausea appeared.

But physical injury from tobacco is a matter of quantity and individual response. It should not be used by growing youngsters, as it definitely retards cell development. By age 25 a certain amount of resistance will have been acquired and the effect upon the fully developed nervous system will not be nearly so obvious.

Occasionally the question is asked: "Is tobacco an aid to digestion?" The answer is "No!" However, if one has been accustomed to smoking after meals the nervous reaction due to deprivation may upset the normal flow of the digestive fluids. There is no question but that the confirmed smoker who is unable to indulge shows increased signs of nervousness.

Medical Treatment.

If one really wishes to reduce his tobacco intake and finds, as many do, that excessive smoking leads to increased irritability, insomnia, etc., it is not difficult to accomplish the end desired with medical aid. Physicians have found that either the extract or the alkaloid from lobelia (Indian tobacco) will relieve the craving.

The program is essentially that suggested by J. L. Dorsey, who recommends that smoking be discontinued after a decided upon midday meal. Coincident with the abrupt withdrawal, lobeline sulphate is given by mouth in capsule form. The dose is very small and may be repeated frequently as the longing becomes overwhelming. After a bit the patient may learn the exact amount required and some have been known to take as many as 18 doses in 24 hours. Dorsey reports that after the drug has been used for a day or two the inclination to smoke becomes less and less. The craving, however, returns in waves, which are easily controlled by lobelia.

The effects of the drug, on the whole, are salutary. Appetite is improved and nervous, undernourished young women particularly may recover the bloom of health. In some cases chronic coughs disappear and persistently coated tongues lose their decorations. In no small number of patients circulation is improved, as noted by the absence of habitually cold hands and feet.

Diet Catering Prompts Child To Spurn Food

Most Children Will Eat Adequately and Readily If Left Alone.

By Alice Clarissa Richmond.

AT HOME Mary never drank milk. It disagreed with her, she said, and anyway she didn't like it. There were a great many things which disagreed with Mary. Her diet was a constant source of worry and anxiety to her mother, who knew the child was underweight and tried in every way to stimulate her appetite—every way but the right one, which was to pay no attention to it.

There are children who cannot eat certain foods. There are children with whom milk, for example, does not agree, and who are allergic to various things such as fish, tomatoes or cauliflower. Such physical idiosyncracies if they are real must be put up with. But in Mary's case this was not true.

When she went visiting and a glass of milk was put at her place, she drank it without comment just as the other children did. In fact, she ate everything on her plate, and a great deal of it. A week away from home among people who paid no attention to her peculiarities would have put on her the extra ten pounds she needed.

There is no need to worry about the physical welfare of a healthy child who will not eat. Put the food before him and let him suit himself about eating it. Let the diet be well cooked, well served and balanced, and if he declines, for example, the green vegetable or the milk, do not let him fill up on what he does like.

If he refuses part of his food let him go hungry for awhile.

Chinese Poet Led Women Rights Move 1,000 Years Ago

Rsearch reveals Yu Hsuan-chi, foremost poetess of the T'ang Dynasty in China, as the prototype of the modern woman.

Campaigning more than 1,000 years ago for the recognition of woman as man's equal, she repudiated the teaching of Confucius that the aim of feminine education must be submission, it is brought out in "Selling Wilted Peonies," first English translation of her poems, just published by the Columbia University Press.

Yu Hsuan-chi sued her husband for divorce, made a perilous journey across China, refused to pay conventional "hush money," and consequently was unjustly executed for murder before she was 30, according to Genevieve Wimsatt, biographer of the poetess and translator of her poems.

Shopping Service At Jelleff's Is Big Help to Men

Young Ladies Are Trained to Solve Yule Gift Problem.

By RUTH ANNE DAVIS.

WHEN it comes to shopping a man is usually as much at loss as a woman is changing a tire. He enters a store courageously telling himself that all he has to do is see and choose. But, alas, how often he comes, he sees, and is conquered!

The dazzling displays of perfumes, cosmetics, red gloves, print handkerchiefs and rhinestone purses that thrill the feminine shopper dismay him. Gradually his courage ebbs and before long he gazes at the luxuries around him with a dull and troubled eye. But buy he must, he tells himself, so out comes the wallet and down goes the cash on the first thing to take his fancy. It might be a brocade evening purse for a wife who wants, needs, and has hinted for a suede one. It might be a blond braid for his brunette daughter, or a dozen pairs of hose, size 12, in bright colors for a prim sister who wears only gray. There's no telling what it might be!

At Jelleff's there is no shopping situation such as this. A corps of young ladies who make up the Elisabeth Brewster shopping service are willing and ready to lend a helping hand to any befuddled gentleman who comes into the store. These girls are trained to know the solution to all and every gift problem. They will make suggestions, act as guide, or help him carry out his own ideas.

Gleaming Collars.

AN EXCELLENT pepper-upper for a dull dress and especially appropriate for the holiday season are the sequin collars. They're as gleamingly bright and as vivid in hue as the balls on a Christmas tree.

At Jelleff's you'll find them in soft smoky pinks, green, blue, red, and even white, $2.95. They are in two styles, cowl and vestee. Before you choose, consider your type and select one that will be most becoming to you.

Also in the same section are some soft white silk collars daintily trimmed in beadwork. One of these will make a pleasing gift to just the right somebody.

RIGHT out of the window they go. Up the chimney and out the door. Into thin air they go, or up in smoke. At last they are gone, those hosiery troubles that have trailed us ever since hosiery first was. You know, and you know and in fact we all know, how stockings break out at the knee from the strain of garters or supporters. Well, at Jelleff's you'll find the Vanity Fair "Knee-last hose" are practically proof against this. They (hip, hip, hooray!) are individually proportioned with patented lastex shock absorbers inserted just above the kneeline and below the garterline. As a result, the strain is lessened, and the long life of the hose is lengthened.

Prices are $1, $1.15 and $1.35. There's a fascinating range of shades.

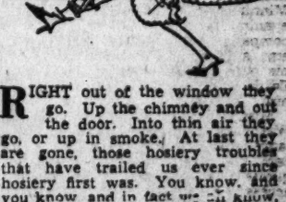

If you want a "dee-vine" shade for evening wear, try "Sunset."

Dramatic Cloaks.

TO MAKE the holiday season a complete success we must have a suitable wardrobe for a bit of extra gallivantin'. Especially is this true of the debs and young collegiates whose engagement books are probably already crammed with plans.

Terrifically essential to this gay time is a stunning evening wrap. Whether proud parents hang it on the Christmas tree for their charming daughter or whether she buys it herself for the gala season, is small matter. The main thing is to have one. Not just one, but a cloak, for instance, such as you'll find on Jelleff's fourth floor. Here is a copy of Schiaparelli's dramatic "bow shoulder" wrap in a deep, glowing wine velvet, only $25.

Enthralling many a youthful eye are the Damask coats with plenty of flare and swish to them, ranging from $16.95 to $25.

MISS PRACTICALITY who wants to give a gift which is guaranteed to please and to be useful need look no farther than Vanity Fair Slips. Imagine a material spun of silk and rayon that washes like a dream and requires no ironing.

These slips are beautifully made to fit like a sheath and will not cling, twist, ride up or sag and they have the grand convenience of shadow panels. Do be sure and see them! ! ! ! The price, $3.95.

Starlight.

WITH more lustre than a cluster of stars are the rhinestone belts at Jelleff's. You ask about your Christmas gifts that are brimful of the old what have you, here they are. Pleasing to look at as well as to wear. They are especially gifted in freshening stale wardrobes and giving a super touch of elegance to any number of party frocks. Real bargains for $2.95.

Pope's Illness Made Complex By Varicosis

Pius Grows More Restless With Tenth Day of Confinement.

Vatican City, Dec. 14 (AP).—A serious varicose condition in Pope Pius' left leg has complicated his circulatory stagnation, attendants said tonight on the tenth day of the pontiff's confinement to bed.

He has no fever, but has become increasingly restless because of the chilly humidity of the last few days, they declared.

Last night the 79-year-old Holy Father was less tranquil than some previous nights and Dr. Amanti Milani, his physicians, was called to administer to him.

Vatican sources said, however, improvement in his condition was shown by the fact Dr. Milani makes only three daily visits now instead of four, as previously.

His Holiness' strong will, it was said, has helped his resistance against partial leg paralysis and other old-age infirmities.

He is assisted by his two secretaries, Mgrs. Carlo Confalonieri and Diego Venini; two nurses, his valet, Cavalieri Malvestiti, and by Franciscan brothers who take care of his apartment.

Democrats Report 2 Large Donations

By the Associated Press.

Contributions of $25,000 by Curtis Bok, of Philadelphia, and $23,100 by J. M. Patterson, of New York, to the Democrats during the Presidential campaign were reported yesterday to the Senate Campaign Funds Investigating Committee.

Patterson, prominent publisher, reported he also had contributed $1,000 to the re-election campaign of Senator Norris, of Nebraska, running as an independent. His Democratic donations included $1,000 each to Gov. Herbert Lehman of New York and Frank Murphy, gubernatorial candidate in Michigan.

Largest Republican contributors reporting yesterday were C. H. Worcester, of Chicago, and Henry W. Putnam, of New York, each of whom gave $10,000, and William N. Elkins, of Whitemarsh, Pa., who gave $10,010.

Big Democratic donations included W. A. Harriman, New York, $5,000; Attorney General Cummings, $1,450; Mrs. Cummings, $525, and Secretary Perkins, $525.

Bankhead Stresses Tenancy Problem

Jasper, Ala., Dec. 14 (AP).—William B. Bankhead, Speaker of the House, described the farm tenancy problem today as "the paramount challenge to the next Congress."

Simultaneously, Senator John H. Bankhead, brother of the Speaker, said he would reintroduce a bill to set up Government machinery for financing farm purchases by tenants on a low interest rate and long-term payment basis. Representative Marvin Jones, of Texas, is co-sponsor of the proposal.

Speaker Bankhead was leaving here today for Washington.

His new bill, the Senator said, would eliminate the original $1,000,000,000 corporation idea and authorize an annual $50,000,000 appropriation to be administered under the Agriculture Department in promoting farm ownership.

Miners Union Imposes Special Assessment

By the Associated Press.

The United Mine Workers notified members yesterday of special dues assessment of $1 a month for January and February.

The possibility of a strike next April 1, when present contracts expire; the work of the Committee for Industrial Organization and an "intensive campaign" for labor legislation this winter made the special assessment advisable, officials said.

Mae West Wins Contest Over Marital Status

New York, Dec. 14 (AP).—Frank Wallace, vaudeville actor, lost his court action today to have Mae West declared his legal wife after the film actress established she has had "neither residence nor domicile" in this State for many years.

'Sit-Down' Strike In WPA Pressed

Chicago, Dec. 14 (AP).—Card-playing and sketch talks amused 32 men and women Sunday in their second day of a "sit down" demonstration aimed at forcing a four-point program of demands on the Workers Progress Administration.

Sympathizers brought food to the demonstrators in the conference room they had appropriated in the WPA office suite of the huge Merchandise Mart.

R. Stomer, assistant to the district WPA supervisor, said the demonstrators had not been disturbed and would not be, so long as they remained orderly.

Robert Foley, spokesman for the self-styled "sit in" committee, said they were protesting against "mass layoffs of WPA employes," and the "means" test by which WPA restricts work to those who have no other means of livelihood. He charged the test was used "falsely to justify layoffs."

Strikers Reject Truce.

Flint, Mich., Dec. 14 (AP).—By a vote of 103 to 3, striking operators of Flint trolley coaches refused yesterday to accept proposals that they resume operations tomorrow, pending arbitration, of idle transportation facilities here, which have left workers, school children and Christmas shoppers stranded for six days.

Russ Columbo's Mother Marks Wedding Date

Los Angeles, Dec. 14 (AP).—Blind Mrs. Julia Columbo, who after three years still is being kept in ignorance of the death of her son, Russ Columbo, radio crooner, began her fiftieth year of wedded life yesterday.

Remarried to her husband, Nicholas, in a golden wedding celebration last night, Mrs. Columbo told friends she was very happy despite the inability of Russ to attend.

When he died, the victim of an accidental shooting, Mrs. Columbo was seriously ill. Relatives reassured her that he is kept from visiting her only by engagements in the East.

'Bojangles' Robinson 50 Years a Dancer

New York, Dec. 14 (AP).—Bill "Bojangles" Robinson, ace tap dancer of the stage and screen and Harlem's first citizen, yesterday celebrated the fiftieth anniversary of his debut in the show business.

"In a couple of years," he said, "I'll really start dancing. I've just been coasting for the last 50 years, but with a little more practice I may get pretty good."

Police Only to 'Detain' Drunken Pedestrians

St. Louis, Dec. 14 (AP).—As a "good Samaritan" act, St. Louis police were ordered to "detain" temporarily pedestrians who appear to have difficulty walking in a straight line.

Maj. Albert Bond Lambert, chairman of the board of police commissioners, said wobbly walkers would be released when they regained their equilibrium.

The order was made to further traffic safety, he added.

Burned Body of Girl Found in N. J. Woods

Cape May Courthouse, N. J., Dec. 14 (AP).—The burned body of a young woman was found in a burlap bag in the woods at Dias Creek yesterday.

State Trooper John Killeen said it apparently had been placed there three or four days ago and there were fresh footprints nearby.

Dr. Julius Way, county physician, said the body was that of a woman 19 to 21 years old and about 5 feet 7 inches tall.

Death Frees Mother Of Daily Church Vow

New York, Dec. 14 (AP).—When two of Mrs. Josephine Aurello's five sons marched off to war in 1918 she vowed that if they returned safely she would attend church three times every day.

They came back safely in May, 1919, and true to her vow she began a rite which continued until November 29 when she suffered a heart attack. She died this morning, aged 67. At her side were the two sons, Magistrate Thomas Aurello and Harry Aurello.

N. Y. Dock Worker Held In French Murder Case

New York, Dec. 14. (AP).—Held today for questioning regarding a murder in France, John Caputo, 42, longshoreman, denied he ever had been in that county.

He asserted he was a native of California. Officers said he would be held pendnig receipt of fingerprints from France identifying a man of the same name who was sentenced to the guillotine in Rhone, January 31, 1924.

The Federal Diary

By Samuel Lubell.

Promotion Plan

A simple plan to stimulate promotion within the ranks of Government employes was suggested by Richardson Saunders, personnel assistant to the Secretary of Labor, at the American Public Welfare Association's panel discussion on "putting merit into the merit system."

Under Saunder's plan, which was not fully elaborated at the panel discussion because of lack of time, the Civil Service Commission would continue to give competitive examinations for vacant positions as at present. The change that Saunders would introduce would be to give any person already employed by the Government and who has a high efficiency rating, taking such a competitive examination, an additional five points preference.

Saunders justifies this preference on the ground that any employe who has earned a high efficiency rating must have demonstrated those qualities of co-operation and personality which are essential to efficient service and which cannot be brought out in a formal examination. Such a plan, Saunders also argues, would stimulate the morale of the Government worker, not only by increasing promotion opportunities, but by facilitating transfer possibilities between bureaus and agencies.

Instead of having bureaus fight to keep their more efficient employes, giving these employes a preference rating would place higher positions in other bureaus or agencies closer to their grasp.

Saunder's proposal seemed to have been favorably received by one of the persons on the panel—Albert H. Aronson, personnel chief of the Social Security Board. Aronson speaks tonight in the ICC hearing room at the third of Labor Lodge, No. 12s, civil service forums and might be induced to expound a bit further on the promotion situation.

Toys and Dolls

This being the time of the year when all of us succumb to the heart-melting influences of that stout little fellow in snow-trimmed red trousers and jacket, the Federal Diary is doing its bit to swell The Washington Post Toy and Doll Fund.

Employe organizations in eight agencies have already sent out good cheer boxes or have arranged Christmas parties and dances and we ask all our other friends in the Government service to work with the Diary, individually or collectively.

How can you co-operate? First, let the Diary or Fund have the names of any Government employes you know of whose children are not assured of a visit from Santa. All of the Fund's toys, dolls and cash collected through the Diary's efforts are going first to the families of Uncle Sam's workers.

Second, if you belong to any organization—and who doesn't?—get that group to co-operate—the Diary is providing a special entertainment service for any group wanting to stage a party or dance. If you can't get your organization started in time, how about sending your contributions in directly to the Fund or to the Diary—read any of the Toy and Doll Fund stories for details on collection.

Mrs. Floy Boyer, of the Tariff Commission, has just had her new collection of poems published under the title of "The Heart Unbowed." You will enjoy her poem defining the "forgotten man" as the man of middle age.

Milk Bottles

One delightful feature of working in Washington is that no matter what question comes to mind, a telephone call to one of the Government agencies will almost invariably produce an answer. The other day, for example, we got to wondering about milk bottles—how long they lived and how frequently they strayed from the milk company fold. We called Agriculture and weren't surprised at all to be connected with C. E. Clement, who had just completed a study on milk-bottle losses in 100 plants throughout the country.

Some milk plants belong to bottle exchanges, and the average life of their bottles is 42.91 trips, particularly lucky bottles making as many as 82 trips. The plants that do not belong to milk exchanges don't do as well—the average life of their bottles being 23.95 trips, with the A-1 traveler making the journey from plant to breakfast table only 28 times.

Size also is an important factor—more pints being lost than any other size. Housewives find pint bottles so convenient for their preserves. Then construction workers are pint drinkers, and, it seems, they are constantly obeying that impulse to smash the bottle against the steel girders they are working on.

Laxity Held Cause of D.C. Auto Deaths

Motorists, Pedestrians Both Are Blamed for Mounting Toll.

Maryland Crash Victim Dies in Hospital, 2 in Car Injured.

Carelessness, on the part of both motorists and pedestrians, is the reason for Washington's rapidly mounting traffic death toll, officials of the police and traffic departments said yesterday.

Fatalities for this month have risen to 12—an average of almost one daily. The yearly total at this time is 93—less than last year's total of 116. Deaths in 1934, established a District record when they reached 136.

Inspector Benjamin A. Lamb, supervisor of traffic in the city, attributes the deaths mostly to careless driving.

"Motorists," Lamb said, "do not govern their driving with conditions. A man can "speed" at 15 miles an hour," he said.

Explaining, Inspector Lamb stated:

"On a clear day, speeds of from 20 to 35 miles an hour might not be dangerous or careless. But at night, or when visibility is poor, the same speeds are exceedingly hazardous. Yet drivers do not take this factor into consideration. They continue at the same speed and, consequently, if a pedestrian walks into the street the driver cannot see the person in time to stop.

Traffic Director William A. Van Duzer discounted speed as the factor in most Washington automobile deaths. Careless pedestrians, he said, have caused the rising toll.

More Men Needed.

"Additional motorcycle policemen to enforce traffic regulations will, in a measure, cut down the number of accidents," Van Duzer said. "The Police Department, however, does not have sufficient personnel for this work."

Careless driving is the reason set forth by Maj. Ernest W. Brown, superintendent of police, for the deaths.

Maj. Brown said his observations of traffic conditions show negligent driving, weaving in and out of traffic lanes, coupled with unreasonable speeds in congested areas, attributes to the heavy yearly loss of life and property.

Motorcycle policemen will cut down this disregard of traffic regulations, the major said. "But we do have enough men," he added.

"In 1934 the District put on a most vigorous campaign to educate motorists and pedestrians in traffic safety, but traffic deaths mounted to the high of 136.

"Strict enforcement of regulations with more careful driving will reduce this condition, Maj. Brown said.

One man died in Georgetown Hospital yesterday from injuries received in a traffic accident in River road, in Maryland, several other persons were injured.

Earl L. George, colored, 36, of 1901 Sixteenth street northwest, was pronounced dead on arrival in Georgetown Hospital after the automobile he was driving skidded on a curve and overturned at Seven Locks road, in Montgomery County, Md.

Two passengers with George, James Gibson, 39, 1432 T street northwest, and Edwin Sims, 24, of 1315 Twenty-second street northwest, all employed at Congressional Country Club, escaped with minor injuries.

Three Exonerated in Deaths.

The coroner's jury exonerated three motorists yesterday in connection with the deaths of Wilmot W. Trew, 56-year-old real estate operator, and Charles F. Meyers, 72, of 509 Sixth street northwest.

Samuel B. Farnum, jr., of Paterson, N. J., and Vernon L. Derrickson, 31, of the 1800 block Kalorama road northwest, were released by the jury after an inquest into the death of Trew.

Witnesses testified Trew was struck by Farnum's car in front of his home, 5900 block Sixteenth street northwest. The force of the impact knocked Trew under the wheels of Derrickson's taxicab. The body was carried about 53 feet from the point of impact, police said.

In the second inquest, George W. MacDonald, 18, of 520 Seward square, driver of the car that struck Meyers, was absolved from blame.

Meyers died in Gallinger Hospital of a fractured skull Saturday after he was struck at Sixth and G streets northwest December 3.

Testimony disclosed Meyers walked into the street in front of MacDonald's automobile.

Retiring President and Successor

Surgeon General Compliments Dentists for Preventive Work

Dr. Parran Says They Are Far Ahead of Physicians in Educating Public in Address at Society Meeting Honoring Dr. Camalier.

Physicians are two decades behind dentists in preventive work, Dr. Thomas Parran, jr., surgeon general of the United States, told the District Dental Society last night.

Dentists organized themselves many years after doctors, Parran said, yet they are twenty years ahead of doctors in that they have educated the public to have periodic dental examinations.

Dr. Parran said: "The Federal and State governments spend vast sums for social service to take care of sick persons and dependents in old age and ill-health. For every dollar spent in preventive medical work they could save $100 in social work."

The talk was made before 300 members of the dental society and their guests gathered in the Mayflower Hotel to honor Dr. C. Willard Camalier, president-elect of the American Dental Association. He is the second Washington man to hold that office.

Commissioner Melvin C. Hazen, Senator William King, Dr. Leroy Miller, returning president of the American Dental Association, and Rear Admiral Percival S. Rossiter, surgeon general of the United States Navy, were among the guests of honor. Dr. A. D. Weakley acted as toastmaster.

Bethesda Holds Record Parade; 5,000 Attend

About 5,000 persons lined Wisconsin avenue as the longest parade ever held in Montgomery County marched through the business district of Bethesda last night in celebration of the completition of improvements to Wisconsin avenue and the official lighting of a "Santa Claus Lane."

More than 60 floats and marching units made up the parade, which included bands, military aggregations and school children.

The parade was preceded by the dedication of the Capital Transit Co.'s bus and trolley terminal on Wisconsin avenue at the District line at 7 p. m., when greetings were exchanged between civic and governmental leaders of Montgomery County and the District of Columbia.

Representing Bethesda was Miss Louise Helen Sipes, recently chosen as "Miss Bethesda," and a court of 40 girls attired in colonial costumes. The court and its queen were received by E. D. Merrill, vice president and general manager of the transit company.

Officers of the Bethesda Chamber of Commerce, sponsor of the celebration, and guests viewed the parade from a stand near Wisconsin avenue and Leland street.

The fete also inaugurates a "trade week" campaign to boost business along Wisconsin avenue.

Seven cups were awarded to winners in the parade. Judges were William A. Walsh, president of the Silver Spring Business Men's Association; Leslie C. Rucker, vice president of the Columbia Heights Business Men's Association, and former Judge Donald A. DeLashmutt, of the Rockville Police Court.

Girls of the Bethesda-Chevy Chase Junior High School took three of the cups, being judged the best marching unit, the best juvenile unit and the most original unit.

Winners of the other four trophies were the Elks Boys Band, of Washington, best band; Ayrlawn Farms, best float entered from Montgomery County; Snyder-Farmer Junior American Legion Squadron, of Hyattsville, best drum and bugle corps, and the Potomac Electric Power Co., best float from outside the county.

Paper Firm Wins Cup for Efforts In Charity Drive

A loving cup, offered by Charles Zurhorst, funeral director, to the member of the Southeast Businessmen's Association whose firm raised the most money during the recent Community Chest drive was won by the R. P. Andrews Paper Co., it was announced last night.

The cup was presented by Zurhorst to J. P. Shafer, an official of the paper company, which maintains its establishment at First and L streets southeast.

A total of $586 was raised by the firm. Shafer represented Andrews at the ceremonies, which took place as the Southeast Businessmen's Association held its regular meeting.

Falls Church Boy Wounded on Range

Bernard McGinnis, 17, of 505 Great Falls road, Falls Church, Va., a student at St. John's College, 1225 Vermont avenue northwest, was slightly wounded in both knees late yesterday when he was shot accidentally by a fellow student at target practice on the school's special range.

The accident, said physicians at Casualty Hospital, where the victim was taken, might have been much more serious had McGinnis received the bullets directly.

Private Jobs Need Stressed By Woodring

Federal Action Is Slated Unless Business Men Aid, He Warns.

Requirements of Masses Offer New Frontier, Says War Chief.

Secretary of War Harry H. Woodring last night told 1,100 members of the Washington Board of Trade that they should take greater responsibility for eliminating unemployment.

At the same time he intimated the social security program eventually might be extended to include agricultural workers who, he said, once more are deserting the farm for the city.

Saying there are at present between 8,000,000 and 10,000,000 unemployed, he called upon industry to assume the "lion's share" of the responsibility for putting them back to work.

Should industry not accept its burden, he declared his belief that "the people will exert some other force outside of industry which will make action obligatory."

"We who call ourselves practical business men—in politics we call ourselves conservative liberals—do not want Government in business any more than is necessary," he said. "But," he added, "if industry does not help solve this problem there should be increased action through Government control."

Woodring said he did not subscribe to the idea that unemployment is the result of overproduction. It is rather, he asserted, the result of the wrong kind of production. Quoting C. F. Kettering, he said "the accepted practice was to let mass production go on oversupplying the old and obvious needs" instead of attempting to find new ones.

Along this same line, the War Secretary said he could not agree with those who deplored our lack of geographical frontiers for expansion.

"We still have immense and untapped frontiers," he declared. "They are the wants and needs, necessities and luxuries, desires, if you will, of a mass of 130,000,000 people whose high level of education and democratic institutions have enabled them to realize, appreciate and know what they want and how to utilize it."

In handling the problem of unemployment, he said, "there must be at the outset a thorough realization that the problem is a sociological one as well as an economic one, containing two opposing forces, costs and profits on the one hand, and human beings with their standards of living on the other hand. * * *

"Generous and fair treatment of labor in the long run pays the best dividends," he declared.

After enumerating purposes of the security act, Woodring warned the program itself would not do away with unemployment. "It is imperative at this very time an effort be made to shift workers to private enterprise as quickly as possible," he urged.

Showing that since the end of the depression the population trend is again toward the city, Woodring said agriculture labor displacement may require unemployment benefits or some other assistance to farm workers. He said:

"It is probable that without some form of security the farmer may say to himself: 'Why work on the farm even at wages comparable to those in industry when I don't get the benefits under the social security act which are available to other workers? The condition bears careful scrutiny and planning for the future."

Mrs. Cary Grayson addressed the meeting, held at the Hotel Willard, in behalf of crippled children. Two crippled Washington girls, Grace Vitality and Mildred Petrey, entertained the gathering with songs. Among those present were Gen. Malin Craig, Army chief of staff, and other high Army officers.

Public Utilities Commission Inquiry Asked by Civic Club

Southeast Businessmen Seek Congressional Investigation, Charging That Most Decisions in Last Year Favor Capital Transit Co.

The Southeast Business Men's Association, in session last night, voted to request that a Congressional Committee be appointed to investigate the actions of the Public Utilities Commission.

At two other civic meetings opposite views were taken on the proposed eight-hour day for District firemen.

Members of the Southeast group said they felt that within the last year practically all the decisions of the P. U. C. had been in favor of the Capital Transit Co., and that a probe should be conducted to determine why.

The organization further opposed the $3,000,000 proposed Jefferson Memorial, which would stand in the Tidal Basin. Instead, the members went on record as favoring and urging the erection of a Jefferson Memorial Stadium which would stand at the end of East Capitol street.

Erection of a memorial in the Tidal Basin would necessitate the draining of a part of it, the association held. Such a step, it contended, might damage the Japanese cherry blossoms, which bring tens of thousands of visitors to the District each spring.

Favors Eight-Hour Shift.

The Park View Citizens Association adopted a resolution favoring the proposed eight-hour shift for firemen. The shorter hours would permit firemen to have a reasonable time for family affairs and recreation which is now denied them, and would also force employment of more men in the Fire Department, the association believes.

A resolution opposing any increase in the speed laws of the District, especially those which cause revocation of operators' permits, was adopted by the association.

The group went on record as favoring the appointment of an attorney of ability interested in civic affairs for the post of people's counsel.

F. V. Hale was re-elected president. Other officers elected were B. J. Kroger, vice president; John S. Cole, secretary; H. H. Moore, treasurer; F. S. Walker and F. S. Smith, delegates to the Federation of Citizens Associations. Members of the executive board are Miss Emily Scriver, Miss Edith Shannon and F. S. Smith.

Opposition Recorded.

Opposition to the proposed 8-hour shift for firemen was expressed in a resolution adopted by the Kalorama Citizens' Association.

The resolution declared the need for more funds in the health department, the schools, Gallinger Hospital and the District Jail, to be greater at this time than for an 8-hour day for firemen.

A resolution asking that the office of people's counsel be abolished was also adopted. The group went on record as indorsing the small claims court proposed by Judge Nathan Cayton.

Indorsement of Maj. Ernest W. Brown's plea for 300 additional men and women in the Police Department was expressed by the association after hearing a talk by Capt. Rhoda Milliken, Women's Bureau head.

William McK. Clayton was indorsed as successor to former People's Counsel William A. Roberts last night by the Piney Branch Citizens Association. The resolution urged his appointment upon the District Commissioners and urged the support of the Federation of Citizens Association.

Lansburgh Official Speaks on Security

Adolph Weyl, comptroller of Lansburg & Bro., explained the social security act and its meaning to business men and employes at a meeting of the National Capital Group of Comptrollers last night at the Raleigh Hotel.

The group is composed of comptrollers of all lines og business in Washington and is headed by Harold G. Malone, president, comptroller of the Hecht Co. department store.

City's Health Needs Urgent, Ruhland Says

System of Centers Are Necessary, Official Informs Club.

Citing Washington's high mortality rate as evidence that something is wrong with health facilities here, Dr. George C. Ruhland, District health officer, last night told the Monday Evening Club the advantages of a system of health centers.

Speaking at a meeting at Barker Hall, Dr. Ruhland said Washington had "the doubtful distinction" of having the second highest tuberculosis death rate of the Nation's large cities. Infant mortality also is higher here than in most cities, he said.

Dr. Ruhland said the high mortality rate here was less excusable than elsewhere because Washington is not an industrial city. Ordinarily, he said, the mortality rate tended to be greater in industrial centers.

Records that show venereal disease to be twice as prevalent here as in other cities the speaker held to be inaccurate. He emphasized, however, that there is no doubt about the other figures, compiled over a long period.

Through statistical study, Ruhland said, it has been found that disease in Washington is most frequent in certain areas, all of them inhabited by the poor. Health centers in these areas, he said, would be the most effective means of cutting down the mortality rate.

Facilities would be provided in these centers for diagnosis, consultation and to a certain extent for treatment, the health officer explained. After diagnosis, the hospital cases would be taken care of elsewhere.

In addition to the facilities provided at the centers, they would serve also as headquarters for staffs of nurses, who would visit homes of the indigent in the surrounding neighborhoods, Ruhland said. He estimated about 300 of such nurses would be the minimum number essential for Washington.

Saying the Central Admitting Bureau is inadequate in scope, although doing "fine work" within its field, William A. Roberts, former peoples' counsel, advocated that the District take over Columbia Hospital. Such acquisition, he said, would reduce the pressure at Gallinger Hospital and would lead the way toward the development of a municipal hospital.

Ross Garrett, director of the Central Admitting Bureau, told the group that the acquisition of Columbia Hospital at this time would result in a serious overcrowding of the city's private hospitals.

Walter Huston Wins Plaudits On First Night

His Performance asOthello Occasions Many Curtain Calls and Speech.

By Nelson B. Bell.

"OTHELLO." Max Gordon presents Walter Huston in Robert Edmond Jones' production of the tragedy by William Shakespeare in two acts and 10 scenes.

THE CAST.

Othello	Walter Huston
Desdemona	Nan Sunderland
Emilia	Natalie Hall
Iago	Robert Keith
Cassio	G. P. Huntley, jr.
Roderigo	Arthur Pierson
Brabantio	Edward Fielding
Duke of Venice	A. P. Kaye
Lodovico	Walter Beck
Gratiano	Joseph Roeder
Paulo	William E. Morris
Montano	Leo Chalzel
A Herald	George Spaulding
Messenger	Philip Foster
A Gentleman	Elliott C. Brown, jr.

Senators: George W. Masters, Al Bayfield, G. B. Kingston, Natan Sack, Edward James

One of the Shakespeare tragedies most infrequently played on the Washington stage was given an uncommonly fine performance in the National Theater last night.

This was due primarily to the superlative endowments of Walter Huston as an actor whose capabilities seem up to any reasonable, or unreasonable, encompassments, and the inspired artistry of Robert Edmond Jones in his investiture of a grim drama that is not the most easily playable of the Shakespeare catalogue.

"Othello," dedicated to the disastrous consequences of unfounded jealousies, is one of the Bard's plays in which he has betrayed the least facility in expression. The speeches intrusted to the Moor of Venice, Desdemona, Iago, Emilia and the other prime figures in the cast do not flow trippingly from the tongue, but are verbose and bombastic utterances that betray little of the simple verbal commentaries of ordinary people upon the tragic developments of a far-fetched and imaginative plot.

It is all the more to the credit of Walter Huston, Nan Sunderland and their associates in the cast, therefore, that they made of this lugubrious drama of marital infelicities as moving, as compelling and as completely comprehensible a rendering of one of Master Shakespeare's more stilted plays as they did.

Walter Huston Triumphs.

There can be no middle ground that one may safely occupy with regard to the Huston interpretation of the title role of this tragedy. For my own part, I set his performance down as one of the fine achievements of this generation in Shakespearean drama—perhaps not a Salvini, but at least a pretty fine Walter Huston, and that is about as able a demonstration of contemporary historionism as the modern theater is able to afford.

In the role of Desdemona, Nan Sunderland, Mrs. Huston in private life, comports herself in splendid fashion. Her reading is eloquent, beautifully timed and as replete with the sinister implications of the Shakespeare intent as one could wish. Scarcely less can be said of the Iago of Robert Keith, or the Emilia of Natalie Hall—both roles played with a complete command of the dramatic and lyrical qualities of parts that are essential to the rounded fullness of the drama.

Robert Edmond Jones, recognized as one of the theater's most authentic artists in the matter of color, costuming and decor, has given his production of "Othello" a dignified and thoroughly impressive setting that imbues the ten scenes of the two acts with a colorful realism that adds greatly to the effectiveness of the successive scenes of the most swiftly paced Shakespearean production Washington has seen in years.

Three Stand Out.

"Othello" is not one of the greatest of the Bard's tragedies, but it is one of the most fascinating by reason of the fine opportunities it affords at least three members of the cast—Othello, Desdemona and Iago. Walter Huston is especially fortunate in this production in having Robert Keith as his Iago. There have been arguments, from time to time, as to which might really be the stellar role of this play, Othello or Iago. There are virtually two stars in this one, due to the exceptionally fine performance of Mr. Keith.

G. P. Huntley, jr., adds the luster of a fine dramatic inheritance to the portrayal of the role of Cassio. Arthur Pierson is a personable Roderigo and Edward Fielding and A. P. Kaye do well as Brabantio and the Duke of Venice.

The superior acting of those in the pivotal roles, Mr. Jones' richly harmonious settings and costumes and the skillful lighting that was devised to throw many of the stage pictures into colorful relief conspire to make this one of the notable engagements of the year at the National.

Last night's large and enthusiastic audience found the play, cast and production so much to their liking that they accorded them a sufficient number of curtain calls to induce Walter Huston to make a short curtain speech at the end of the last act—a function which he performed gracefully and graciously.

Rudy Vallee Will Bring New Revue for Christmas; We Run Into Many Old Friends, Hither and Yonder

The Amusement World's Ace Crooner Comes to Capitol on Friday, December 25; Bert Lahr, Harry Kaufman, Wallace Munro and Senor Don Alfonso Zelaya Bob up in Most Unexpected Places; Sidney Lust Goes to Bat for the Suburbs' 'Forgotten Kids.'

CHRISTMAS DAY will bring back to the Capital and the Capitol—and what havoc the boys in the composing room can work with that line if they are not careful!—one of the most popular figures in the amusement world.

BELL.

As a result of negotiations that were completed only yesterday afternoon, Loew's Capitol Theater on Christmas, which this year is by way of being Friday, December 25, will present Rudy Vallee and his second "Punch Bowl Revue" as its stage attraction.

We recall with pleasure Master Vallee's last appearance on the same stage with the first of his revues and anticipate an even greater meed of entertainment from this second of his ventures away from the microphone—unless you count such trivia as his appearances in George White's "Scandals," and the like.

Rudy Vallee, above all else, is a showman, possessing something of the same uncanny sense of public taste as my old friend, the late Samuel Lionel Rothafel—"Roxy" to you. He is expected to bring to Washington on this Yuletide visit one of the most pretentious productions of his career.

That, of course, is the usual thing to say, but one always lives in hope that maybe the prediction will come true. In Rudy's case, it habitually does.

So who comes barging out of a neighbor's home, a few doors above ours on Gallatin street, on last Sabbath afternoon but that distinguished Latin-American, Senor Don Alfonso Zelaya, son of a former president of Nicaragua, who has been seen and heard so frequently on local stages as one of vaudeville's finest surviving pianist-monologists.

In an impromptu pow-pow—in which Senora Zelaya also participated in a remote sort of way—we went 'way back to the old days 30 years or so ago when Stonestreet's, down on the Avenue near Twelfth, had a back room and a rickety old piano at which Don Alfonso proved something of the potentialities of the "horse teeth" as a source of rhythmic melody.

Senor Zelaya arrived in Washington Saturday from an engagement in Dayton, Ohio, for the Xmas holidays and will leave the Capital about the first of the year for a January 4th engagement in Chicago. His apartment in the Westchester, I think it is, has been sublet and Senor Zelaya is camping out in his capacious home on North Capitol street, when not cruising about town in that front-drive Cord of his that looks like a young battleship miraculously given land legs.

Alfonso probably will be a stellar member of the cast of one of these seasonable Christmas toy fund celebrations that are being put on on all sides under notable auspices in practically every theater in town. He wants to do his bit for the underprivileged kids of the District. Quite a fellow, this Don Alfonso. Ask anybody.

That Sunday lead in the drama section of The Post was not in any sense to be construed as talking out of turn. What we said in print concerning the shortcomings of the management of "The Show Is On," we also said to those gentlemen in person. It was in the neighborhood of 1:30 a. m., and Fourteenth and E streets, when and where I ran into Harry Kaufman and Bert Lahr, following their last Washington performance of a highly satisfactory week at Uncle Steve Cochran's National Theater. I told them then just what was already in type at the time—that they stood in fine prospect of scrambling their show just as the late Flo Ziegfeld messed up "Hot-Cha." They professed to realize the situation and insisted that the show had been put back into the form and the routine the Capital saw on last Monday night.

Harry Kaufman, quiet and unobtrusive contact man for the Shuberts, is one of the aces of show business and knows what time it is every hour of the day in the theater; Lahr is a comic who has few peers, if any, on the contemporary stage. One can talk their own language to these fine-feathered fellows and not have it end in a brawl. Glory be!

• • • •

And then an otherwise uneventful Monday is given the glint of a scintillant personality by the presence in the tesselated elegance of the drama department of that most distinguished of the drama's avant couriers, Wallace Munro, who comes to town to herald the fact that the D'Oyly Carte Opera Company, that sterling band of exponents of all the comic and lyric charms of the Gilbert and Sullivan Savoyard operas, will be the attraction at the National Theater for the week of President Roosevelt's second inauguration.

The engagement will open on Monday night, January 18, and will continue, one suspects, for a fortnight. There is no more welcome visitor to the drama desks of the Capital than this monumental Briton, Wally Muro, once a member of the Buckingham Palace Guards and always a member of that fraternity of good fellowship that desks like this value most.

• • • •

That ring on the phone just now was from Sidney B. Lust, foremost of the Capital's independent exhibitors, who merely wanted it known that he is not lagging behind the main procession this year in the matter of special Christmas Toy Matinees for the "forgotten children" of the suburban neighborhoods in which his theaters operate.

All on Saturday morning at 10 o'clock, the Arcade Theater, in Hyattsville, Md., the Cameo Theater, in Mount Rainier, and the Milo Theater, in Rockville, will put on special Toy Fund shows to which the admission charge will be a toy, doll, piece of wearing apparel or some other appropriate contribution to the spirit of the Yuletide.

These performances will be under the auspices, respectively, of the Kiwanis Club, of Hyattsville, the American Legion Post in Mount Rainier and the Welfare Board of Montgomery County in Rockville.

Diagnosis.

It must have been that cheese-popcorn I ate at 4 o'clock this morning—the sardine sandwich, Welsh rarebit and raw beef sandwich with chopped onions couldn't have had anything to do with it!

• • • •

Idle Chatter.

HOLLYWOOD, Dec. 14.

How inconformable to see Clark Gable pilot his $20,000 car into a drive-in stand, where sandwiches are 15 cents. Contrast in couples: Ever sun-tanned Joan Crawford (she uses artificial light in winter) and white-skinned Franchot Tone. Arline Judge's habitual studio attire is a fur coat beneath which she wears blouse and shorts. Bing Crosby detests liars and come to think of it, I have never caught him in even a little white fib.

CLARK GABLE.

Sonja Henie's never-changing, broken English greeting: "Hallo, what is happen now?" Doubles in personality: Janet Gaynor and Ruby Keeler.

Pat O'Brien says his newly adopted son sleeps too much; he can rarely catch the baby awake to show him off. Peas from the same pod: Margot Grahame (today) and Peggy Hopkins Joyce (ten years ago). Sylvia Sidney, when sitting, is a slipper-on-toes dangler. Nat Pendleton's barrel-like chest causes men to turn enviously (and women covetously). Sid Silver's priceless crack: "If all the smart alec critics were tied end to end, somebody should tighten the knots."

I eased into the office of a certain Paramount producer who is struggling with a lemon; honestly, the more he edits the more sour his picture becomes. He was out of the office, so I asked his whereabouts. His secretary sighed, "He's over in the dejection room!"

Only one-timers in this city can realize the amazing change in the parade of automobiles along the boulevards today as compared to ten years ago. Joan Crawford, Jean Harlow, Fred Astaire, Kay Francis, Pat O'Brien, Ginger Rogers—I might name a list as long as a boarding-house reach of stars who drive low-priced cars.

How different from the middle 'twenties, when Poli Negri rolled around town in her bright pink $22,500 limousine. When "Fatty" Arbuckle owned a custom-built car that was bigger than any other I have ever seen and cost $30,000. When Rod La Rocque owned two imported motors that cost $18,000 each. Those were the showcase days, when a star whose automobile cost less than $5,000 was practically a social outcast.

Of course, this former manner of tossing around dollars as if they were pennies largely accounts for the great number of former stars on motion picture relief today. It is my guess that current stars will find their prudence rewarded by financial security years hence.

SELECTING A PLAN.

The selection of the correct line of play is more than half the battle from declarer's point of view. The actual execution of the plan is far easier than the selection. Of course, in one sense, the two are closely related, since in ordr to select there must be a sort of mental preview of the subsequent tricks. In today's hand a vulnerable slam was fulfilled by correct selection and perfect execution.

West opened the five of spades, dummy won with the ace and declarer now carefully considered alternate lines of play. H promptly abandoned the idea of ruffing a club in dummy, since this could not work for two distinct reasons: first, it would be necessary to concede a club before a third round could be ruffed and, thus, if the opponents wanted to they could easily remove dummy's single trump ace. Even if they did not do this, there was a chance of a spade overruff and, in addition, the fact that the ace of hearts could not be spared for ruffing purposes. The plan of establishing dummy's spades was also disdained: a fair break in the suit, or an early fall of the king and jack would be necessary. Also, this plan would entail ruffing two spades, with the subsequent danger of overruffs.

Having disposed of the unfavorable plans, declarer embarked on the one that was left. He cashed dummy's ace of trumps, then entered his hand with the king of diamonds. He drew the outstanding trumps in three additional leads, discarding one club and two spades from dummy, and then led the eight of diamonds. West covered with the nine, and now declarer made the really crucial play of the hand. He let the nine win, not even risking putting up dummy's jack. The moment that West followed to two rounds of diamonds, declarer saw a sure victory and was certainly not going to risk his small slam for the lure of an overtrick.

It was fortunate for him that he didn't. East showed out on the second diamond lead, and now a finesse was established against West's remaining queen-ten. West led a club which the ace won, and the diamond finesse was taken and declarer's two losing clubs discarded.

It should be noted that had declarer taken the innocent-appearing diamond finesse, he inevitably would have lost the hand. The Jack would hold, but West still would have the diamonds stopped, and, since dummy would have been void of entries except for the diamond ace, the suit could not have been established and cashed for the necessary club discards.

E. B. McLean, Jr., Publishes Paper At Suburb Plant

Edward B. McLean, jr., has become the fourth generation of his family to go into the publishing business, his mother, Mrs. Evelyn Walsh McLean, wife of the former publisher of The Washington Post, announced last night.

Young McLean has established and is president of The Friendship Press, with offices and plant in the building of the Independent Publishing Co., at 1065 Wisconsin avenue northwest, in Georgetown.

His first print job came off the press last night, and he will undertake all sorts of printing and publishing.

His great grandfather, Washington McLean, founded The Cincinnati Enquirer, which his family estate now controls. His grandfather, the late John R. McLean, built the Enquirer into one of the leading newspapers of the country, and then purchased The Washington Post. His father published The Post for many years.

CHAPTER THIRTEEN

The next hour was one of tense waiting. Teck had sighted the great snowplows coming up. His telescope had picked them out on a curve of the mountain road. They were coming slowly, their great plows clearing the road as they came—monster engines that moved tons of the glistening white snow as they came along.

"Pretty soon, doctor," he reported to George.

Chicquita packed a lunch. Teck had his old car ready and it stood now, a disreputable wreck out in the drive that Teck and Gus had already cleared of snow.

"You pin your confidence on a light foundation, George," Doris said, making talk. "I wouldn't be sure that the old car would go a mile."

"It will, though," George argued. But he was worried, nevertheless. He had had considerable argument with Teck on the very same subject.

"It will go," Teck averred proudly, "that old car's got a lotta good life in her yet. She'll take you any place you want to go."

"Yeah, maybe, with you at the wheel. But what if I get stalled and forget the magic word to make her start up again? What then?"

"You won't. Just put down the lever and give her the gas good and quick."

"O. K., Teck, but I still think I'd feel more comfortable if I took my own car."

"Huh. Maybe, doctor." Teck's voice held the toneless solidity of his race but George listened respectfully just the same. "But with my old boat you'll get through and none of them will challenge you."

"And why, Teck?"

"Because you look Indian and act Indian. You could really be Indian."

"And why not in my car?"

"Car too good. Suspicious car. The police would stop you. Just like that." Teck illustrated, with a snap of his fingers.

"But other Indians drive good cars."

Teck nodded. "Yes, Oil land Indians, maybe. Cherokees, Osages. Not Jemez Indians."

"Maybe you're right, Teck. You usually are. But what about the police finding my car? My car is here and I'm not here. What about that?"

Teck shrugged his shoulders. "Maybe so. Maybe not. Likely not. A good many times your car has been here and you've not been here."

"But Patrick?"

Teck's brows wrinkled in thought. "Patrick is the trouble. If they come and find Patrick here—and you're not here. Then I don't know what. Almost everybody hereabouts knows the dog. Knows the two of you are always together."

"Maybe I'd better take him."

"No. That wouldn't do. Anybody down in the valley knows he never goes with me."

"Probably you're right," George said heavily. "I guess, old Patrick, you'll have to stay here with Teck. You'll be a good dog, won't you, Patrick?"

But Patrick waved his tail feebly in token of the fact that although he understood his master's commands, he approved them not even faintly.

In the end Patrick went along.

"The minute the plows pass," George had said, "we'll be in the car and ready to start."

The great plows came on, one after the other, making the snow-drifted highway a smooth ribbon of white behind them, as they swept their majestic way ahead.

"Pull your shawl down close to your head," George advised, hiding his own head with the deep parka.

"Now," Teck said, "she goes."

Chicquita stood at the window. She wiped the tears from her eyes. Teck stood back to let them start.

And then like a flash Patrick came, cleaving the air in his haste. He brushed past Doris as she stepped into the car and bounded from the front seat to the empty back seat. Sat there on the worn old leather cushions trying to smile, dog fashion, but determined to go.

And the dog showed his fangs with a growl when Teck opened the door and tried to coax him out.

"All right. All right," George said impatiently. "We'll have to take the risk. Lie down, Patrick. Lie down."

Instantly understanding, Patrick crouched to the floor of the car in back and Teck threw a robe over him.

"You'll have to be quiet all the way, Patrick," George said sternly.

They were off.

It was a world of white wonder through which they rode that morning. The highway, miles and miles of trackless, smoothly swept road, stretched before them. Theirs was the first car along the road. On one side, in places that were miles long, they looked down over sheer cliffs of rock and snow.

Only a few miles, though, and they would be below the snow line.

George found himself mentally praying that they would meet whatever cars they must meet before they came down out of this snowy region.

When they reached the warm, sunlit valley below there would be no excuse for a closely drawn parka or a shawl that covered a brown face too carefully. On the snow-swept, mountainous heights those things seemed only natural, but down in the valley, in the midst of civilization they stood out for what they were—just disguises.

George told Doris this as they went along. Explained his fears to her.

"What do you plan to do?" Doris trembled from sheer nervousness.

"I don't exactly know. What do you think we should do? Is there a place I could take you—where you would be safe?"

"Not a place in the world—not a place that I know."

"No relatives or special friends?"

Doris considered. "Not any that I would want to appeal to—now." She decided quite truthfully.

"Then we'll have to get along as best we can. I've got some ready cash, fortunately."

"But I haven't. Not a penny," Doris remembered ruefully. "I had a few bills. They were hidden away in the pocket of that gray squirrel coat. The coat you and Teck burned."

"I'm sorry." George's eyes were on a speck that he knew to be a car. It was moving rapidly up the mountain road toward them. Now it was lost on a turn. "I didn't mean to burn anything valuable."

"The coat was valuable."

"I know. But too easily recognized. I didn't dare take the chance of having it found either in this car or back in the cabin. I'll buy you another."

"If I ever get safely out of this mess I can buy myself one," Doris told him. "I have some money of my own. You see, my mother——" She stopped abruptly, watching George.

She could sense every nerve of the man who sat by her tensing. In just a few minutes," he warned. "We're going to meet them. Now. "I thought I caught sight of them around a turn a few minutes ago. Now I'm sure. Take it easy, girl."

"I will," Doris encouraged, knowing that she trembled.

"And you, Patrick. Lie still."

If any living thing lay under the robe there was not a sign of it. Patrick was as inanimate as a sack of flour might have been under the same circumstances.

"Pull your shawl a little closer," it's cold enough up here. Maybe they'll pass us without a word. We'll hope so."

But it seemed that the hope was forlorn.

Aound the bend and along a considerable straight stretch as they descended into the valley they met the car.

LOUIS STOPS SIMMS WITH FIRST BLOW IN 26 SECONDS

The Washington Post

* X WASHINGTON: TUESDAY, DECEMBER 15, 1936 19

This Morning . . .

With Shirley Povich.

Perhaps figures do not lie, as the copybooks teach us, but in the case of the official American League fielding averages for 1936, announced yesterday, they arouse, at least, a lot of powerful suspicions anent their infallibility.

POVICH.

Unblushingly, the cold type tells us that the leading first baseman of the league, defensively, is Big Zeke Bonura, of the White Sox, and that the best defensive outfielder is Al Simmons, of the Tigers.

Well, a human being would have to say it with a smile if he were making the same statement to a baseball fan. Because the man on the street knows that there are at least three better fielding first basemen in the league than Bonura and at least a dozen better outfielders than Simmons.

To name a few: Joe Kuhel, of the Nats; Jack Burns, of the Tigers, and Lou Gehrig, of the Yankees, could come down with the misery and still come close to holding their own with the slow-moving Bonura. And Simmons, as an outfielder, does not deserve mention in the same inhalation with Sammy West, of the Browns; Mule Haas, of the White Sox; Mel Almada, of Boston; Joe DiMaggio, of the Yanks; Joe Vosmik, of the Indians; Ben Chapman and Johnny Stone, of the Nats; Wally Moses, of the Athletics, and Doc Cramer, of Boston.

Yet, there it is in cold type—Bonura and Simmons, like Abou Ben Ahdem, leading all the rest. Something must be screwy with the figures. If not the figures, then, at least, the method of calculation. And that appears to be the root of the trouble. The figures tell not untruths, but half-truths which can be every bit as misleading.

Up in the press box where the scorers hand down their official decisions on plays that directly affect the fielding averages they are hidebound by hoary, moss-covered scoring rules that guarantee false credit to bungling players.

Slow-moving men of the type of Bonura and Simmons get an unjustified good break in the scoring rules which forbid any player being charged with an error on a ball that he fails to reach. They may be rooted in their tracks as hits whistle past—hits that more alert players might have prevented—yet their very weakness, their failure to break quickly on the ball and their lack of native speed, makes them virtually immune to being charged with errors.

Conversely, the dashing performer who, with cat-like speed, has a chance to catch the ball and attempts to catch it, risks being charged with an error, should he fail to make the catch cleanly.

In the case of the cumbersome player who made no attempt to reach the ball, the scorers have no alternative but to credit the play as a hit. However, should the more ambitious player misjudge his own speed, or that of the ball, and bobble it he leaves himself open to being charged with a misplay.

Thus it is that club owners, managers and fans place no great faith in these fielding averages, particularly when they reveal that well-known miscreants rate far up. The temptation is to let the figures be hanged and trust to their own judgment to rank the men on performances, not the lack of performances, as the official scorers are forced to do. The players who rate far up there on paper are too often sorry sights on grass.

In Short—

Yes, and there's such a thing as dumb base-running boosting a team's batting average . . . when a player is caught napping or takes a foolhardy lead or a putout on a stupid attempt to steal or take an extra base, well, that all improves the team's average at bat . . . because the putout by reason of being charged against the base-runner instead of against a batter, results in one fewer time at bat being charged against the team . . . Strikingly illustrating the fact that infield play in the big leagues is highly specialized, is the comparative averages of Red Kress as a second baseman and as a shortstop . . . in his 33 games at second base, Kress was the absolute best, leading the league with a fielding average of .995 . . . in his 64 games at second base, Kress was no better than twelfth in the list with an average of .927 . . . the fact that Washington was second in the league in the number of double plays committed is not as great a compliment to the Nats as appears at first glance . . . it reveals that, among other things, the Washington pitchers were permitting these men to reach base before they were wiped out with double plays . . . Until this season, no Washington club in Manager Bucky Harris' memory had ever made a triple play . . . yet they executed two within a month during the past campaign . . . but Heinie Manush, playing first base for Washington in an exhibition game several years ago, figured in a triple play in his first absolute first fielding effort as a first baseman . . . The true index of a catcher's defensive ability is not his fielding averages or the number of putouts or errors that he makes, but to the number of assists beside his name . . . an assist is far more cherished by a catcher than a putout . . . it means he has caught somebody stealing with a good throw, or he has cut down somebody trying to take an extra base, or that he has wiped out some base runner who rounded a base too far . . . thus it is fitting that the capable Luke Sewell, with 87 assists beside his name in the 1936 averages, leads all the catchers in that respect by a wide margin.

Joe Louis backs away after flooring Eddie Simms, Cleveland heavyweight, in the first 18 seconds of fighting last night. The referee bothered not to count Simms out, halting his count at eight and awarding the fight to Louis.

Bomber Near Record As Foe Goes to Floor In First 18 Seconds

Referee Donovan Stops Bout After Simms Staggers to Feet at Count of Nine; Result Listed as Technical K.O.; 10,000 See Action.

By Bill McCormick,
A Staff Correspondent.

Public Hall, Cleveland, Ohio, Dec. 14.—Joe Louis, the Brown Bomber, exploded on Eddie Simms here tonight in near record time.

Before a capacity crowd of 10,000, the sensational Detroit Negro blasted Simms back into oblivion—if he ever had deserted—in exactly 26 seconds.

The crowd, which had contributed some $45,000 toward a Christmas benefit card, gasped in amazement as Louis terminated the fisticuffing with the fourth wallop launched in the scheduled 10-round encounter.

The final punch was a short left hook, which was parked concisely on Mr. Simms' face, midway between the jaw and the cheek bone. It sent the accordion-playing Slovenian onto the floor with bewilderment written on every feature.

As Referee Arthur Donovan, imported from New York for the occasion, tolled from 1 to 9, Simms dragged his flustered carcass from the canvas. Simms was up, but obviously still out, and Donovan stepped between the poor sleepwalker and his antagonist for an examination which convinced him the bout should be halted even then.

Simms Goes to Floor.

Simms was sent down exactly nine seconds after the opening bell had sounded. He rose exactly 18 seconds after the beginning and the other eight seconds were consumed by Donovan in determining whether or not Eddie should be allowed to continue.

Had Simms not been able to arise, his knockout at the hands of the Detroit Detonator would have been very close indeed to a world's record for the heavyweight division. Jack Dempsey stopped Fred Fulton in 17 seconds, and Simms would have been stopped in 18 had he stayed down instead of staggering blindly to his feet. Had Louis accomplished the 18-second knockout over Simms, the finish would have been but a few seconds off the all-time record for a knockout, established by Al Foreman, a lightweight, in stopping one Harry Green in Montreal—11 seconds.

Simms let loose the first blow in

Scott Defeats Williams on Decision

Verdict Is Unanimous One; Bracala in Victory Over Carrier.

Scott unanimously.

That was the verdict handed down last night by the referee and two judges at the end of a blood-tingling ten-round feature bout between Buddy Scott, fighting George Washington University student, and Hobo Williams, Alexandria light-heavyweight, at Turner's Arena.

Before more than 1,500 spectators, the strapping Scott overcame Williams' early lead with a walloping two-fisted attack that almost had his Alexandria rival on Queer street in the final round.

Scott's rousing finish and the determined manner in which he landed his gloves on Williams body and jaw in that hectic tenth round left an indelible impression in the minds of fight fans. He won four of the last five rounds.

It was the second match between the two fighters. A few weeks ago they fought to a draw at the Arena.

Scott weighed 169 and Williams 168½.

Aggressor from the very outset, Williams showed plenty of steam and punching power in winning three of the first five rounds. His

Macfarlane's 266 Wins Nassau Open Golf

Scot, 6 Under Par, Takes $800 Prize

Nassau, Bahamas, Dec. 14 (U.P.).—Wee Willie Macfarlane, of Hollywood, Fla., continued his attack on par figures today and came home a three-stroke winner in the $4,000 Nassau Open Golf Tournament.

With an 18-hole card of 66 today, Macfarlane posted a final 72-hole total of 265—6 below par—and pocketed $800 first-place prize money.

He led Horton Smith, Oak Park, Ill., and "Lighthorse" Harry Cooper, Chicago, by three strokes at the finish. Smith, with a 67 today, and Cooper, with a smart 65, tied at 269.

Macfarland had the satisfaction of overcoming a jinx that barred him from the Nassau title last year. In the 1935 tourney he was out in front of the field, but cut his hand and his game blew up on the final round.

Leo Walper, Washington, D. C., pro, finished with a 71 for a 284 total.

The veteran Macfarlane's aggregate of 266 was the lowest ever recorded on a championship course during a major tournament.

The Scot had rounds of 68, 68, 64 and 66 for his six-below-par total.

Asked today if he threw any broken bottles off the course in the manner that caused his cut hand last year, Wee Willie replied:

"I was so careful I didn't even pick up the tees, despite my Scotch blood."

Macfarlane Out in 35.

Macfarlane showed that 25 years of competition had not palsied what is considered one of the finest swings in golf. He was out in 35, one over regulation figures, and returned with a blistering 31, three under par.

Coming back, Macfarlane put his midiron 6 feet from the pin of the twelfth for a birdie. He canned a mashie-niblick shot for another birdie on the sixteenth. He took a par on the seventeenth when he missed a 2-footer that would have given him another birdie.

Horton Smith and Harry Cooper split $800 in prize money for their deadlock. Smith was out in 34 and back in 33 for a 67 today. Cooper had a 65, taking 34 strokes on the way out and streaking home in 31.

Morton McCarthy, of Norfolk, Va., captured amateur honors with a 72-hole card of 283.

Owens Easy Winner In Annual A. P. Poll

By the Associated Press.

New York, Dec. 14. — Jesse Owens' habit of setting the pace makes it no surprise that the Tan Thunderbolt was voted the outstanding athlete, amateur or professional, of 1936, in the sixth annual poll conducted by the Associated Press.

It was surprising, however, that Owens, winner of four Olympic gold medals and undisputed world sprint and broad jump champion, almost trebled the vote received by his nearest rival, Carl Hubbell, New York Giants' pitching ace and winner of the poll in 1933. Owens is the second Negro to lead the poll. A year ago it was Joe Louis.

Owens received 53 first place nominations among the 69 experts who participated in the voting. All told the Ohio State star, who now is cashing in on his cinder path glory with various sorties into the professional field, polled 177 points, while Hubbell, drawing down only five first place votes, received 68 points.

The latest batch of ballots to arrive resulted in Larry Kelley, Yale's voluble all-America end, yielding third place to Max Schmeling, the man who was unafraid and proved that, after all, Joe Louis was just human. When the first tally was announced Kelley took third place with 33 points to 32 for Schmeling.

1. Jesse Owens, quadruple Olympic winner, 177 points.
2. Carl Hubbell, leading National League pitcher, 68.
3. Max Schmeling, German conqueror of Joe Lewis, 37.
4. Larry Kelly, Yale's all-America football end, 33.
5. Glenn Morris, world decathlon champion, 23.
6. Fred Perry, world tennis champion, 14.
7. Jo DiMaggio, sensational Yankees' outfielder, 11.
8. Forrest (Spec) Towns, world champion high hurdler, and Joe Louis, 7.
10. Dizzy Dean, ace St. Louis Cardinals' pitcher, and Tony Manero, open golf king, 6.
12. Lou Gehrig, Yankees' first base iron man, 5.
13. Johnny Fischer, American amateur golf champion, 4.
14. Jack Lovelock, Olympic 1,500-meter champion; Dutch Clark, professional football star, and Sammy Baugh, Texas Christian grid star, 3.

Philly Assured Army-Navy For 3 Years

By the Associated Press.

Philadelphia, Dec. 14.—The traditional Army-Navy football game will be played in 1937, 1938 and 1939 in the Municipal Stadium, where two weeks ago it was played before 105,000 persons.

A three-year contract, with an option of three additional years, was signed today by Mayor S. Davis Wilson and representatives from the West Point and Annapolis academies.

"The Army and Navy were so well pleased with the facilities in Philadelphia," Mayor Wilson said, "that they have executed a six-year contract for the rental of the stadium at $10,500 a year. This means they have agreed to play the game here for three years, with the option of an additional three years."

"The Navy is satisfied that Philadelphia is the best place to play the game," Capt. R. C. Griffen, director of athletics at the Naval Academy, said.

85,000 Rose Bowl Seats Sold; Capacity Crowd Held Assured

By the Associated Press.

Pasadena, Calif., Dec. 14.—Tournament of Roses football authorities announced triumphantly today that the teams of Washington and Pittsburgh would play before a capacity throng of around 85,000 in the annual Rose Bowl classic New Year's Day.

Enjoying a private little snicker at the expense of doubting critics, who predicted a sharp let-down in Rose Bowl prestige when once-tied, once-beaten Pitt and Washington were named to perform in the Arroyo Seco Stadium, athletic guardians of the big game shut down the ticket windows this morning.

"The Rose Bowl is definitely sold out for the New Year's Day game," Carl Kilgore, manager of athletics of Washington, announced.

Overflow requests for tickets, he said, would be returned this week.

The ticket office was open just seven days. Apparently it made no difference that the opposing teams had slightly soiled records, as what team in the Nation hasn't?

The Tournament of Roses committee, obviously anxious early last week over the fate of its annual intersectional grid offering, was desirous for Pitt and the Huskies to proceed directly to Pasadena to train for the game in order to "stimulate" local ticket sales.

This won't be necessary, and it's just as well, because Dr. Jock Sutherland had already arranged to pitch his Pitt squad at Arrowhead Springs, 30 miles east of here, until just before the day of the game.

Pitt is due to leave for California Wednesday and reach Arrowhead Springs Saturday.

Coach Jimmy Phelan and his Washington Huskies are due in Pasadena early next week, and will train here.

U. S. Sues Minnesota For Unpaid Grid Taxes

Minneapolis, Minn., Dec. 14 (U.P.).—The Federal Government filed suit in Federal Court late today against the University of Minnesota, seeking to recover $108,157 in alleged unpaid taxes and penalties on athletic tickets sold in the last five years.

The university has refused the claims on the ground the Federal Government cannot tax State institutions.

Penn to Battle Harvard Eleven on '39 Schedule

Philadelphia, Dec. 14 (AP).—After a lapse of 11 years, two members of the so-called "Ivy League," the University of Pennsylvania and Harvard, will renew football relations in 1939, it was announced today.

Texas Christian Plays In Cotton Bowl Game

Dallas, Tex., Dec. 14 (U.P.).—Texas Christian University has accepted an invitation to play Marquette University in a New Year's Day football game in the Dallas Cotton Bowl, it was announced tonight by J. Curtis Sanford, president of the Cotton Bowl Athletic Association.

Proph, at $11 Mutuel, Wins Tropical Park's Opening Feature

15,000 Watch Racing Start In Florida

Parrish Colt Sets Own Pace, Wins by Head Over Zaca.

By the Associated Press.

Tropical Park, Fla., Dec. 14.—Proph, chestnut son of High Time-Mary Belle, flaunting the silks of J. W. Parrish, of Midway, Ky., raced to a hard-earned victory in the featured Bouganvillea Purse here today as Florida's longest turf season, scheduled for 96 racing days, got off to a colorful and successful start.

Winner of his last start at Churchill Downs, Proph made all his own pace and at the end of the 5½ furlongs held a head advantage.

W. H. Gallagher's New England flash, Zaca, barely failed to make the grade and was the fourth straight losing choice. Mrs. Emil Denemark's Prairie Dog lost the place by a length and a half. Proph paid $11 for $2 and his time was 1:06.

Sun-baked fans to the number of 15,000 enthusiastically welcomed king horse back to the compact course operated by smiling "Big Bill" Dwyer and his associates of the Coral Gables track. This is the sixth consecutive year of racing at the picturesque little plant which has come to be known as the "Friendly Track."

Although the thoroughly resurfaced racing strip, now deeply covered with loose loam, is supposed to be slower as well as safer, the sprinters were making very creditable time. The Bouganvillea served as a substitute for the Coral Gable Inaugural Handicap, which was called off due to the too-numerous declarations.

Earl Porter, who used to command a wide following in this sector, rode Proph faultlessly. He broke the colt on his toes and took a snug hold while his mount showed the way to Noel H. to the stretch. Zaca failed to show the early foot his many backers expected, but made a game bid in the final drive, only to find Proph a bit too game. Prairie Dog, in close quarters on the back stretch and also in the late stages, was an easy third over the tired Noel H., which ran into trouble in the stretch.

Bob Charlie Victor.

Mrs. C. P. Didener's 2-year-old colt, Bob Charlie, ridden by Bobby Watson, had the distinction of accounting for the first race of the long-awaited Florida season here today.

Under a well-judged ride by Apprentice Bierman, Dark War, a 5-to-1 chance, drove to a length-and-a-half score in the six-furlong second event. The well-played Zevanaid failed to stick it out, but saved second money by a length from Epitaph, another that drew a good play. Bierman kept Dark War close to Zevanaid's speedy pace, sent the mare up on the outside of the leader after straightening out for home and drew away to win in 1:13 flat.

Bluebeard proved the third straight Narragansett invader to register when he easily outran a band of shifty platers in the third race. Covering five and a half furlongs in 1:06, the Blue Larkspur colt lost no time jumping to the front and opening up a long advantage. He ran My Colin and Joyride into the ground and easily held her likewise at bay, scoring by four lengths. Likewise headed Joyride for the secondary award. Bluebeard paid $11.10.

Strategist Victor.

Hirsch Jacobs, leading American trainer four years in a row, saddled his first horse since the fall meeting at Pimlico in the sixth race. The Brooklyn redhead sent Strategist II after the purse and the 4-year-old gelding obliged by scoring a six-length triumph, making the Jacobs record 167 winners for the year. Strategist II dashed into an early lead and never was threatened. It was the first score of the afternoon for the talent, their selection paying $6.90. Stealingaway beat Real Jam by almost two lengths for the place.

The Triumvir fell over the inside rail at the quarter pole, going down with Apprentice J. Barba. Horse and rider escaped serious injury. Barba was reported to have been shaken up and bruised his right thigh and back.

MONDAY, DECEMBER 14, 1936.
WEATHER, CLEAR; TRACK, FAST.

FIRST RACE—Five and a half furlongs. Purse, $700; claiming. For maiden 2-year-olds. Start good. Won driving; place same. Went to post at 2:00. Off at 2:00½. Winner, Mrs. C. P. Lindner's ch. c. (2), by St. Henry—Handover. Trained by C. P. Lindner. Value to winner, $525; second, $100; third, $50; fourth, $25. Time, 1:08 1-5.

Horses	Jockeys	Wgt.	Post	St.	¼	½	Str.	Fin.	Straight
BOB CHARLIE	(R.Watson)	111	10	4	4^{1}	$2^{1½}$	1^{h}	1^{1}	$6.20

BEARNAIS	(Jackson)	114	8	8	10^{2}	10^{4}	10^{4}	11	109.90

Two-dollar mutuels paid—BOB CHARLIE, $14.40, $6.20, $3.60; WHITTLE, $17.20, $5.60; SORCERESS, $2.50.

BOB CHARLIE broke alertly and, energetically ridden, closed ground in the final furlong and won going away. WHITTLE, on the inside, got through entering the stretch and held on gamely. SORCERESS was probably best, but was almost knocked down by I DO at the 3½-furlong pole. She recovered quickly and was sent up on the outside and finished with a rush and might have won but for interference. SPOTLESS came from far back and was running fastest of all at the finish. I DO had plenty of speed, but stopped badly at the end. LEGSURE is sure to improve over this effort.

SECOND RACE—Six furlongs. Purse, $700; claiming. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good. Won driving; place same. Went to post at 2:33. Off at 2:35½. Winner, Mrs. C. Tumin's br. m. (6), by Traumer—Sun Thor. Trained by A. G. Tumin. Value to winner, $525; second, $100; third, $50; fourth, $25. Time, 1:13.

GOLD STANDARD	(Clutter)	110	2	11	12	12	10^{2}	10^{2}	32.55
BE BIG	(Beasy)	110	3	12	11^{2}	10^{1}	11^{2}	11^{2}	132.90
MISS CAPPERS	(Louman)	110	9	9	10^{1}	11^{2}	12	12	34.15

Two-dollar mutuels paid—DARK WAR, $12.10, $6.50, $4.60; ZEVANAID, $5.20, $3.80; EPITAPH, $3.40.

DARK WAR, well ridden, was hustled along all the way, came around ZEVANAID entering the stretch, closed fast and was drawing away at the end. ZEVANAID displayed keen speed, but weakened in the last furlong. EPITAPH broke good, but was allowed to drop back in the early part, finished with a rush and was a fast-going third. GALLOPING was a stout contender all the way and is worth noting. AUNT FLOR, never far from the pace, ran a good race.

THIRD RACE—Five and a half furlongs. Purse, $700; claiming. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good. Won easily; place driving. Went to post at 3.03. Off at 3:03½. Winner, Mrs. E. A. Rotelli's blk. c. (4), by Blue Larkspur—Herodias. Trained by D. J. McAuliffe. Value to winner, $525; second, $100; third, $50; fourth, $25. Time, 1:06.

PLEA	(Gross)	118	2	5	4^{1}	6½	9	9	36.50

Two-dollar mutuels paid—BLUEBEARD, $11.10, $7.20, $4.60; LIKEWISE, $11.80, $6.30; JOYRIDE, $4.50.

BLUEBEARD broke alertly, was rushed into a long lead early, came a bit wide entering the stretch, but drew away easily at the end. LIKEWISE was hard ridden all the way and just gained the place in the last stride. JOYRIDE moved up very fast on the inside, but tired suddenly. COUNT RAE finished with a rush and is sure to improve. MY COLIN had plenty of early speed. QUICKLY had no mishap.

$2.00 DAILY DOUBLE PAID $69.70.

FOURTH RACE—Five and a half furlongs. The Bougainvillea. Purse, $700. For 2-year-olds. Start good. Won driving; place same. Went to post at 3:33. Off at 3:34. Winner, J. W. Parrish's ch. c. (2), by High Time—Mary Belle. Trained by J. M. Goode. Value to winner, $525; second, $100; third, $50; fourth, $25. Time, 1.06.

Horses	Jockeys	Wgt.	Post	St.	¼	½	Str.	Fin.	Straight
PROPH	(Porter)	109	6	1	1^{1}	1½	1½	1^{h}	$4.50
ZACA	(Barba)	109	4	5	5^{2}	3½	2½	$2^{1¼}$	.65
PRAIRIE DOG	(Kurtsinger)	112	2	2	4½	4^{2}	$3^{1½}$	3^{2}	4.35
NOEL H.	(Seabo)	109	7	4	2^{1}	2½	4^{1}	4^{h}	17.30
PRINCE SADOR	(Deering)	109	5	7	7	6^{4}	5½	$5^{1½}$	22.55
LITTLE SLEEPER	(Stafford)	106	3	3	3½	5½	6^{2}	6^{2}	30.00
JOAN ASBESTOS	(I.Hanford)	106	1	6	6^{h}	7	7	7	47.70

Two-dollar mutuels paid—PROPH, $11.00, $2.90, $2.40; ZACA, $2.40, $2.20; PRAIRIE DOG, $2.40.

PROPH got away very fast and was sent right to the front. He was steadied along all the way and, under a good, strong, hand ride, held on gamely. ZACA moved up very fast on the outside, but hung right at the end. PRAIRIE DOG was in close quarters, saved ground, but was again in close quarters in the final furlong. NOEL H. was sharply interfered with at the furlong pole and was knocked out of it. PRINCE SADOR, badly outrun to the stretch, finished fast. LITTLE SLEEPER showed flash of early speed. JOAN ASBESTOS was outrun.

FIFTH RACE—One and one-sixteenth miles. Purse, $700; claiming. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start poor. Won driving; place same. Went to post at 4:02. Off at 4:04. Winner, D. Hardy's ch. g. (3), by Cherokee—Dangertude. Trained by D. Hardy. Value to winner, $525; second, $100; third, $50; fourth, $25. Time, 1:47 1-5.

Horses	Jockeys	Wgt.	Post	St.	¼	½	¾	Str.	Fin.	Straight
BUSHMASTER	(Gross)	114	3	1	1^{2}	1^{2}	$1^{1½}$	1^{2}	$1^{1½}$	$11.10

WINGED FLIGHT	(Wall)	112	1	4	7	7	7	7	7	25.55

Two-dollar mutuels paid—BUSHMASTER, $24.20, $15.10, $7.90; MR. BUN, $4.50, $3.20; IDLE ALONG, $3.50.

BUSHMASTER broke well in motion, was rushed into a long lead going into the paddock turn and, perfectly rated along, was given a breathing spell turning out of the backstretch, but drew away in the last quarter mile. MR. BUN began to close ground in the run down the backstretch, came to the inside in the stretch and was second in the final stride. IDLE ALONG, rated along to the far turn where she moved up, made her bid, but faltered badly right at the end. MAMA'S CHOICE was away poorly and had no chance. She, however, moved up around the lower turn, but weakened in the last quarter mile.

SIXTH RACE—One mile. Purse, $700; claiming. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good. Won easily; place driving. Went to post at 4:32. Off at 4:36. Winner, Mrs. E. D. Jacobs' b. g. (4), by Stratford—Vizcaya. Trained by H. Jacobs. Value to winner, $525; second, $100; third, $50; fourth, $25. Time, 1:40.

THE TRIUMVIR	(Barba)	109	5	8	8^{2}	6^{h}	6^{1}	†		15.50

†Fell.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—STRATEGIST II, $6.90, $4.10, $3.10; STEALINGAWAY, $5.70, $3.80; REAL JAM, $3.70.

STRATEGIST II broke fast, opened a wide gap early and just galloped along. STEALINGAWAY moved up gamely and was next best. REAL JAM, mean at the gate, but got away fast, showed speed and held on gamely. PAY RACK was well up all the way. JUST BUCK had no mishaps. THE TRIUMVIR swerved, hit the inside rail and fell over the fence.

SEVENTH RACE—One and one-sixteenth miles. Purse, $700; claiming. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good. Won driving; place same. Went to post at 5:03. Off at 5:04½. Winner, W. J. Sprow's b. g. Selections at Tropical Park.

Dear Al:

If I have written this one before, just skip it. However, I like it. A newspaper man, who had been out of work for some time, was making both ends meet by getting a quarter here and there. He had a wife and child but, despite efforts of his friends, he had been unable to land anything to do. Finally, he got two days' work on one of the copy desks and received $10. He was a sort of mysterious fellow and when I saw him with the $10, I said, "That will hold you for a while." He called me aside and asked me if I knew where there was a bookmaking place. I said that I did, and he said that he had a system that couldn't lose. I made a quick mental survey of the situation. Perhaps, this fellow did know something if he was willing to risk the only ten bucks he had in the world and with a wife and child needing food. He was either clever or a fool. I decided to take him to the bookies and let him try his system. If the fellow lost, I planned to give him the sum that he needed. So I took him to the bookmaker's joint. On the way I asked him about the system but he would not let me in on it. In front of the rundown sheets I left him and walked over to watch the boys play blackjack. After about four races, I went over where the fellow was and asked him how he was getting along. He replied that he hadn't made a bet yet. I asked why and he said that there was one angle that was bothering him. What was it? He leaned over and whispered in my ear, "What is a parlay?" I dragged him out of the place. BILL.

First race—Bully Flora gets weight off thanks to the apprentice allowance, and figures to do a lot of running in this field. I have received word on a fair workout and expect no mistakes. War Rumor should like the course and may take second money. Rafter to take care of the others.

Second race—Prince Augie gets in action here with feather weight. He is not much of a horse, I'll grant you, but in this maiden field anything can happen. Blood must carry 120 pounds, but has a little class that may tell. Tumbling Glass is a possibility.

Third race—Regula Baddun, a popular winter horse, seems best suited of those to see action in this sprint. Needs only the right ride to take down the chief award. Second Guess looms as the one to beat. Briny Deep for the third money.

Fourth race—Bellum had little racing luck in Maryland. Was carried wide in a race at Pimlico in which he should have taken the decision by several lengths. Clear sailing here should bring a set of brackets. She Knows and Paralda will be hard to chase out of the money.

Fifth race—The Denemark Stable has had a chance to become acquainted with Genie Palatine, one claimed during the Maryland season. This one is capable of defeating a field of this caliber and may thrive on the long rest. Furfiber, in light, is dangerous. Brandon Prince is a possible surprise.

Sixth race—Guy Fawkes, despite an assignment of 118 pounds, will be a keen factor if not the winner of this race. Prefers this short route and is reported to have worked well. Isador is speedy and has a chance. Veiled Lady probably prefers a longer route.

Seventh race—Wise Will evidently did not like the Bowie track. Appears well suited by conditions here and a win would not surprise me. Peaceful was scratched yesterday with this test in mind. Good Visibility may be third.

Eighth race—Reservist will like this mile. Breaks off the rail and I'm going to string along. Hats Off is a possibility at the light weight. Hokuao for the show end.

Best bet—Bellum.

1—Rafter, Geologist, Strider.
2—Bravado, Judith B., Blood.
3—Regular Baddun, Second Guess, M. J. Brennan.
4—Bellum, She Knows, Ridge Mor.
5—Furfiber, Greek Fire, Genie Palatine.
6—Guy Fawkes, Gala Star, Jub Jub.
7—Night Raven, Peaceful, Thirteen Stars.
8—Sun Teatime, Playvote, Gratton.
Best bet—Sun Teatime.

G. U. Swamps Western Md. Five, 46-16

Hoyas Impress in Debut; Hold 18-3 Lead and Coast to Victory.

By Lewis F. Atchison.

Georgetown inagurated its 1936-37 basketball season last night at Tech High School, where it reduced the Green Terrors of Western Maryland to a group of badly beaten, saucer-eyed boys in a rough, and at times, fast game. The final figures were 46 to 16.

An approving audience of some 1,500 fans saw the Hoyas tear the wrappers off the new campaign with flashes of deftness and finesse that augurs well for a successful winter on the boards. They rolled up a commanding 13 to 3 lead early in the game and finished the first half on the long end of a 24-to-5 count, not coasting, but not exhorting themselves either.

The game proved at least three points to the general satisfaction of the fans, viz. that Coach Fred Mesmer has an abundance of material, that he still needs a center to get the most out of it, and that Western Maryland may have great football teams, but it still puts out a cumbersome quintet.

Using the entire roster and substituting teams rather than men, Murphy, Shore, Kurtyka et al. quickly put the Terrors at their mercy with a steady, but sometimes erratic passing attack that had the visitors spinning topwise. Georgetown elected to take their first shots from close range, setting them up close into the backboard.

Western Maryland's center, Stan Benjamin, outjumped Bertrand, Georgetown's starter at this position, but had his hands full with Mike Petroskey, who looked to be the best of the three. The Terrors, however, failed to convert this advantage into points, either losing the ball by woefully erratic shooting, or having it taken away by the alert Hoya defense.

In a preliminary game Georgetown's freshmen defeated Central High School, 29-21.

Reds' Owner and Frisch Confer, Purchase of Dizzy Dean Subject

By the United Press.

Daytona Beach, Fla., Dec. 14.—Powell Crosley, jr., millionaire owner and president of the Cincinnati Reds, conferred tonight with Frankie Frisch, manager of the St. Louis Cardinals.

Although both claimed their meeting here was "pure coincidence," the subject of the conversation reportedly was Jerome Herman Dean, the "Dizzy" star of the Cards, who is on the auction block.

Pleasure boats of Crosley and Frisch occupied the same dock as the former Fordham flash and the Cincinnati radio millionaire went into a huddle aboard Frisch's boat, The Cardinal.

Frisch's 38-foot boat docked here yesterday and Crosley's Sea Owl came in late today.

"We sure would like to have Dizzy Dean," said Crosley, "but this meeting here tonight is just mere coincidence."

"I didn't know Frisch was here," he added.

Frisch, here to supervise preliminary arrangements for establishment of the Card training camp at Daytona Beach, had little to say about the meeting, except to add that he was "surprised" to see Crosley.

Their talk immediately shifted to the subject of Dizzy Dean, however, as both agreed he was a great pitcher.

But neither would go further than to admit that the great Dean is a highly desirable baseball property.

Crosley was bitter at recent ruling of Judge K. M. Landis, baseball's czar. Asked about the Handley and Peacock case in which Landis ruled both players free agents, Crosley said:

"I think that in view of the Feller decision, Cincinnati got a pretty raw deal and I intend to investigate the Landis matter when I return to Cincinnati."

Hoya Gridmen Elect Hardy Captain

Georgetown University's football squad honored two players with one ballot last night when Al Vaccaro, all-District tackle, was chosen honorary captain of the '36 eleven, recently disbanded, and Lawrence (Red) Hardy was elected captain of the 1937 aggregation.

Vaccaro's election was not a remedial measure for an oversight. So popular were the squad's five seniors that it was deemed advisable to appoint a captain before each game. Vaccaro, taking his usual turn, served frequently in this capacity.

In choosing an honorary captain the men gave recognition to Vaccaro's sterling play throughout the season and his high qualities of leadership. He was a veritable pillar of strength in the line, offensively and defensively, and one of the most popular men on the campus.

Hardy, too, has been a stand-out with the Hoyas, culminating a brilliant season by winning all-American recognition and a berth on every all-District eleven chosen by sports writers and coaches.

Basketball Clinic Ends As 175 Hear Wakeman

Attended by more than 175 followers of the game, the last session of the second annual National Capital Basketball Clinic was held at the Central Y. M. C. A. last night. The attendance brought the total number of patrons to 850 for five sessions, indicating an even more successful undertaking than last year.

Tony Wakeman, sports announcer for WOL, was the first speaker, describing some of the fundamentals of the game, and was followed by Chuck Taylor, former member of the New York Original Celtics. Taylor gave demonstrations of various plays and fouls, with the Southeastern University team as the medium.

Matthews, Former Nat, Now Cardinal Official

St. Louis, Dec. 14 (AP).—Branch Rickey, the Cardinals' "secretary of agriculture," said today Wid C. Matthews, former major league outfielder with the Philadelphia Athletics (1923) and the Washington Senators (1924) and last summer business manager of the Caruthersville, Mo., baseball club, would join the Red Bird organization January 1.

Your Want Ad Would Fill Seven Books

A startling statement? Of course, but it's true. The paper required to print a five line ad for just one day in The Washington Post is more than that necessary to print seven average size books.

Yet a Post want ad costs little, and it's the quickest, simplest and most direct method of buying, selling or renting. Read, use, and profit by them.

Erratic Work Afield Slowed Nats in Race, Averages Reveal

Bluege's Play High Point Of 1936

Tigers Topped Rivals on Defense; Bonura Led First Basemen.

Pertinent evidence why the Washington ball club finished no higher than fourth in the 1936 pennant race is offered in the official American League fielding averages, released yesterday.

The Nats, the figures reveal rated sixth in the league defensively.

The pennant-winning Yankees finished in a tie with the Chicago White Sox for second place in team fielding, with the Tigers topping all clubs in defensive play with an average of .975, two points better than their nearest rivals.

Washington, with its .970 team average, bettered the marks of only the seventh-place Browns and the eighth-place Athletics.

Bluege Twice Leads.

Washington fans can take consolation, however, in the official figures of individual performances which show the veteran Ossie Bluege, who played at three infield positions, leading the league's shortstops and third basemen. In the few games in which he played second base, Bluege finished second to Red Kress, a teammate.

Zeke Bonura, never regarded as a clever defensive player, provided the chief sensation found in the fielding figures by leading the league's first basemen with an average of .996, 2 points better than Lou Gehrig.

Kress was the nominal leader of the second basemen, but among the league's regulars at that post, Detroit's Charley Gehringer was the No. 1 man with his .974 average.

Bolton Does Well.

The Yankees' Red Rolfe topped all the regular third basemen with his .957 average and Boston's Rick Ferrell led the catchers with .987.

Cliff Bolton, of the Nats, never regarded as a defensive star, actually was no worse than fourth among the regular catchers with his average of .979.

League fielding in its entirety fell off a point from its .972 clip in 1935, but five American League records were broken and one major league record set.

The new big league record established was the mark of Jim Bottomley, first baseman of the Browns, who figured in eight unassisted double plays. He had been the coholder of the old record of seven with three other first basemen.

West Sets Mark.

Bonura, by participating in 150 double plays, tied the league record set by Joe Kuhel, and Luke Appling, also of the White Sox, shattered Bill Rogell's record for participating in dobule plays when he figured in 119.

Sam West, St. Louis outfielder, created a new record by making 460 putouts during the season. Charley George, rookie Cleveland catcher, set a new mark for backstops when he handled 17 putouts in a single game—the game in which Bob Feller struck out 17 A's.

Louis Stops Foe After 26 Seconds

Simms' next wallop, another left hook aimed at the head, landed grazingly and Eddie immediately sent a right cross after it. The right—vicious punch—missed the target by a wide margin or another version of the battle might have been written.

While Simms was attempting to place one of the first three blows somewhere on Louis, the Detroit Negro was dodging deftly, adroitly and wearing an expression betokening respect for the alleged punching prowess of his opponent.

As the right cross missed Louis—always the perfect opportunist—rammed home that left hook to the head. A nonchalantly delivered hit, it carried all the force and power of the exceptional Negro's venom behind it.

Simms sank in the ropes, much as had Al Ettore when he was dropped for the last time by Louis, draping himself between the top and middle strands of the ring ropes near his own corner.

Louis shuffled to the farthest neutral corner with absolute unconcern engraved on every feature of his frozen puss. As Joe heard Donovan reach the count of eight, he turned toward Simms and half raised his gloved fists—ready to tear back in.

One look at Eddie was enough to convince him that the poison in his fists was no longer needed to lull the Clevelander into submission. Eddie's eyes were crossed, his knees were wobbly, his face was distorted, but—like so many of Louis' victims—he struggled to his feet, a pitiful sight, indeed.

Donovan stepped between the two fighters, scanned Simms' features carefully, then grabbed Joe's hand, holding it aloft in token of victory

"I saw an opening and I took it, said Louis after the brief workout. "Simms had been touted to me as a dangerous hitter, and I never take any chances with dangerous hitters. I took the first opportunity I had of knocking him out."

Simms still was bewildered minutes after the fiasco had officially been terminated.

"I don't know what happened, or what hit me," he said.

Louis' handlers are planning a vacation for the Bomber, who has kept very busy since he was knocked out by Max Schmeling last summer. Louis will be allowed to rest until after January 1. Shortly after New Year's Day, he will make a fight in Detroit and one in Chicago. After that he may indulge in an exhibition tour, which may terminate in a fight against former light heavyweight champion Maxie Rosenbloom in Los Angeles.

"Big Mike" seems to have effectively blocked Sherman's march to the basket.

Clarke Shoots 441 Set in Federal

Astor Clarke, the Capital's No. 1 ranking pinman, smarting from a grist of "bad breaks" in Sunday's mixed doubles match, unloosed his wrath on the wooden pellets in the Federal League last night at Arcadia, rolling games of 133, 161 and 147 for a brilliant total of 441. Clarke, with the able assistance of Dutch Newman's 391 set, enabled the leading Investigation team in trouncing I. B. E. W. three games with the G-Men annexing high game and set laurels with 627 and 1,830, respectively.

The champion National Capital Parks team is having tough sledding this season and last night was no exception when it took the count in three games in its match with U. S. Senate. Navy's big game of 616 and total pinfall of 1,748 was good for two wins over G. P. O. and Labor, with a top effort of 598, humbled War twice. Veterans' Administration gained the nod over P. W. A.

Perce Ellett, president of the Washington Duckpin Association, last night announced a meeting of the association's board of directors for tomorrow night, with the purpose of lining up its forces in support of the Star tournament.

A benefit dance for popular little Everett (Peanuts) Pierce, who was injured in an automobile accident last month, will be held at the Swanee ballroom tonight. Pierce, a likable chap, made many friends while employed as a floorman at the Arcadia alleys. William J. (Bill) Wood, manager of the Meyer Davis enterprise, has donated the ballroom free of charge.

Williams Loses Decision to Scott right landed often on Scott's jaw, as the former Oklahoman seemed to be biding his time.

Williams appeared well on his way to victory until the G. W. student struck out in the sixth with a volley of punches that took the wind out of Williams.

Sam Bracala, Baltimore welterweight, continued his mastery over Stanford Carrier, Washington boy, to win the six-round semifinal bout.

Bracala carried the fight to Carrier from the outset, piling up enough points to hold him in good stead for the final round. It was in this concluding round that Carrier displayed his best form, rushing in to pepper the Baltimorean with lefts and rights. Bracala weighed 142½ and Carrier 146.

Cyclone Sammy Williams, pride of Southwest, scored a technical knockout over Mark Hough, New York, colored middleweight, in the sixth round of their main preliminary. Williams displayed a terrific two-fisted attack starting with the fourth round and belabored the New Yorker with rights and lefts to his chin. One of Williams' crashing rights caught Hough in the mouth, and Referee Denny Hughes stopped the fight with only 40 seconds to go. Hough weighed 164 and Williams 158.

"Tiger" Red Lewis, a fat 170-pounder from Richmond, won a split six-round decision over Al Loman, of Baltimore. The decision met with a chorus of boos.

All-Sports Banquet Profit Was $400

A total of more than $400 was realized from the all-sports banquet last week and will be used for the benefit of the Police Boys Clubs, the Touchdown Club announced yesterday at its weekly luncheon meeting at the Lafayette Hotel.

The money may be used to buy a cottage at the summer camp of the P. B. C., which would be called the Touchdown Cottage, or as a fund to buy some equipment for the members.

The members heard a highly interesting talk by Representative Usher Burdick, of North Dakota, a star end for Minnesota in 1902 and 1903. The Representative is one of the outstanding authorities on Indian affairs in the Northwest.

McCarter New Sports Director at Dartmouth

Hanover, N. H., Dec. 14 (U.P.)—William H. McCarter was appointed director of athletics at Dartmouth College today, succeeding Harry R. Heneage, who resigned because of poor health.

McCarter, appointed for an indefinite term at any unannounced salary, had been acting director of athletics since October 1, 1935. He also had served as assistant professor of English and assistant librarian.

Virginia Not to Deny Athletes Financial Aid

Lynchburg, Va., Dec. 14 (AP).—Capt. Norton Prichett, director of athletics at the University of Virginia, said tonight that the university will cease denying outside financial aid to athletes because they are athletes in what he termed as a move for "honesty in athletics."

Tigers Down American U. Five, 41-25

Hampden-Sydney College defeated American University's fighting Eagles in the latter's gymnasium last night. The big Tigers trailed the diminutive local team for the first eight minutes of play but forged ahead to lead, 20-16, at the half, and were ahead, 41-25, at the finish.

The game was marked by numerous fouls, the Virginians making the greater percentage of their free shots.

Bob Kincaid and Charley Bernier stood out for the invaders, while Walt "Skippy" Edwards and Capt. Sidney Zink were the hosts standouts.

Baltimore U. Cancels Maryland Court Game

Baltimore, Dec. 14 (AP).—B. H. Brown, of the University of Baltimore, announced tonight Baltimore's basketball game with the University of Maryland, scheduled for Friday at College Park, had been canceled.

Brown said injuries to eligible players caused the cancellation. Several squad members also have been unable to report for practice yet because they are working part-time during the Christmas holidays.

Pour Craft's Keel At Bath on Dec. 21

H. S. Vanderbilt Finances $300,000 Yacht.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Bath, Me., Des. 14.—W. Starling Burgess, designer, said today the keel of the 1937 America's Cup defender would be poured December 21 at the yards of the Bath Iron Works Corporation here.

Burgess and Olin J. Stephens, of New York, are co-designers of the $300,000 craft, which Harold S. Vanderbilt is financing. Size of the mold indicated the keel would be much heavier than the 80-ton keel of the Vanderbilt-skippered Rainbow of last year.

It was known the yacht would be built to the limit of class J length, with an 87-foot waterline.

If all goes well, the yacht will defend America's Cup against T. O. M. Sopwith's Endeavour 2d next summer.

Mount St. Mary's Five Routs Teachers, 42-13

Frederick, Md., Dec. 14.—Mount St. Mary's College defeated Maryland State Teachers College, of Towson, at Emmitsburg tonight, 42 to 13. The Mountaineers gained a 22-to-7 lead in the first half, and Coach Joe Lawler finished the game by giving every man on the squad a chance. The victory was the second in a row for the Mounts.

On the Air Today

A large proportion of those listeners returning Post radio program preference poll forms have taken advantage of the space allowed for "comment." Herewith are presented some of the observations made thus far.

"Breaking in on a musical number to advertise is something to be resented."

"I find it hard to choose between Eddie Cantor and Jack Benny, but I think Eddie wins by a slight margin."

"Is it not possible for WOL to have more of the WOR programs? My pet peeve is that there are still no good programs on between 4 and 6 p. m."

"Best radio actor: Wallace Beery; worst advertiser, Lady Esther."

"Although Wayne King doesn't make a practice of vocalizing, he has sung several times over the air. I think he should sing more often."

"The 'Sunday Evening Hour' is slipping in comparison to last year's programs. Why dicontine half of the 'Hit Parade?' They play music as it is written."

"Radio needs more calm, pleasant-voiced announcers. No one enjoys being 'shouted' at."

"My enjoyment is greatly lessened by studio laughter and applause. Often a favorite program is dialed out because of the annoying racket that accompanies it. Also register my dislike for jazz."

"Why did they cut 'Fishface and Figsbottle' to 15 minutes? Too many unearned honors conferred on Major Bowes by different cities."

"'Good Will Court' the most undesirable in my opinion."

"WOL would be much improved by less recordings."

"We think the programs this year are the worst for years. We want more music and less chatter and we don't mind if the music is recorded."

"Ginger Rogers should play with Fred Astaire instead of Trudy Woods. All barn dances should be abolished."

"'Hit Parade' could be a standout with a real swing band. As it is, it's monotonous."

"As I listened to the beautiful music of 'Lohengrin,' with Melchior and Rethberg's singing yesterday and the wonderful Cesar Franck symphony today, I found it easy to be patient with some of the awful stuff that sometimes comes over the radio. For there is so much that is beautiful, cultural and educational that one can hear it more than compensates."

And wonder of wonders, I discovered one listener who said he had his pet peeves and dislikes—but he was unselfish enough to realize that other persons' tastes didn't necessarily coincide with his!

Buying Splurge Rockets Wheat To 7-Year High

Foreign Prospects Factor; Cotton and Corn Follow in General Rise.

though he said he was not in touch with the situation there.

No Ground for Rreport.

J. W. T. Duvel, chief of the Grain Futures Administration, who had been in touch with the market developments through the day, held there was no ground for a report of an actual shortage of bread material in the world.

"I think there is enough wheat to go around," he said, "though some of it might not be in the right places."

He said word had been received during the day that Italy had taken about 1,000,000 bushels of Argentine wheat, and said this fact, along with the probable "short" position of some traders and the general broad advance of commidity prices would all combine to shoot up the prices.

Another possible factor was receipt of word here that the Canadian wheat board had decided it would not be a further seller of futures until May wheat reaches $1.25.

Duval pointed out that the South American crop, now about ready for harvesting, and the Australia crop are both in good condition, and he scoffed at reports of an actual world shortage.

At the close, Chicago wheat futures were 5 to 6¾ cents above Saturday's finish, December 1.35@1.35⅝, May 1.29⅞, July 1.17¼; corn 2¾@3¼ up, December 109¾@1.09⅞, May new 105¾@106, July new 102½@102.2⅝, oats 1⅛@2⅝ advanced, May 51¼@51¼, and rye showing 5 cents to 6 cents bulge, May 106. Provisions results varied from 5 cents setback to 25 cents gain.

The Market

By Carlton A. Shively
A Special Correspondent.

Stocks and Bonds Advance in Rising Volume; Wheat Soars; Foreign Currencies Gain.

New York, Dec. 14.—Stocks and bonds were pushed along at a good pace, but the headliner of the markets was wheat, where speculation is now running at a pace to suit the liking of any farmer or farm planner in the land. Wheat ran away with the growing interest taken in all commodity markets, and possibly the activity there had something to do with the sudden fillip the stock market received from somewhere. Turnover in stocks rose sharply, approaching the 3,000,000 share mark.

Steels were prominent in the early trading and helped to lift the pace in other groups later on, but the widest gains were scored in scattered specialties. After a heavy fall last week, American Can turned and climbed nearly five points, partly perhaps at the expense of shorts. Corn Products was another stock to rise briskly. International Harvester hardened, but Case was heavy, in spite of the uprush in farm products. Steel held to its point advance, as did Bethlehem. Several of the lesser lights in steel were buoyant, among them Republic and Otis.

Motor shares had a good day, Chrysler moved up more than 2 points. Electrics were strong. Public utilities had a spurt in the middle of the day on news that the Supreme Court had ordered a retrial of the Duke Power case, testing the matter of purchase of plants for public operation. Most of the public utility group gathered strength from that during the remainder of the day.

If sales to procure money with which to meet the quarterly income tax payments tomorrow were a factor, they failed to hold down the market's good feeling. What usually happens at a tax date is that people needing money borrow on their stocks. The extra dividends received over the past few days have in many cases more than offset seasonal needs for cash among shareholders, and reinvestment of the surplus probably has accounted for some of the stir in the markets.

Exchanges Higher.

In spite of the strength in markets here, which suggested foreign as well as domestic buying, sterling and francs hardened. If money is being repatriated it is not bearing down on stocks. Most commodities, including cotton, moved higher, but the sensation was wheat. December options jumped to close 6⅝ cents higher at 135⅝ cents a bushel. Recent lifting of the old 5 cents a day limit caused a record gain for recent years.

With the British stir over, its king out of the way, little else of a world's shaking nature was enjured u to excite the security markets. They were forced therefore to fall back on the humdrum of industrial and commercial news and on such nourishment as they usually receive from a surplus of bearishness. Many of the advisers to traders for the past several weeks have had much to say about the high look of prices, and many heads have been shaken over the fact that the bull market has had no rest since spring, to speak of, and that too much emphasis now is being placed on low priced stocks.

Treasury Payments.

Since the Treasury has not made a call upon its balances in member banks, as it had been expected to do, it may be assumed that the Government will have on hand ample cash It looks as though payments into the Reserve banks tomorrow will almost match payments out. As the Secretary of the Treasury already has announced, the exchange subscriptions for the $358,000,000 of notes due tomorrow and the $429,000,000 of notes due next February are almost 100 per cent, leaving no appreciably total to be redeemed in cash. Hence the Treasury will be chiefly concerned with meeting $400,000,000 of Treasury bills, which will be preto meet obligations due tomorrow. sented for cash, plus about $100,000,000 of the $138,000,000 December interest on the public debt. That usually is claimed by bondholders on the day it is payable.

Federal Debt.

The Treasury has issued a neat and useful transcript of its records from December 1, 1933, to December 9, 1936. The figures for the latter date are adjusted to show December 15, 1936, financing, with the purpose of giving net increase in the public debt. As the Treasury reports it, the net increase in the debt was $10,698,100,000 or about 45 per cent, including $1,100,300,000 net increase in Treasury bills, $462,800,000 net increase in soldier bonus debt and $448,900,000 in savings banks. The Treasury, which can never be accused of overlooking any direct promises to pay, also notes a gain in the period of $575,500,000 in special certificates, notes, matured and non-interest bearing debt, presumably consisting mainly of national bank notes assumed by the Treasury.

Baldwin Has Orders For 136 Locomotives

Philadelphia, Dec. 14 (AP).—The monthly report of bookings by the Baldwin Locomotive Works today states the company has on hand orders for 136 steam locomotives and 41 extra tenders. The dollar value of orders received in November by the company and subsidiaries, including the Midvale Co., amounted to $8,876,849, compared with $2,311,739 in November, 1935. The total bookings for the first 11 months of the year is $35,744,910, compared with $16,444,965 in the same period last year.

Life Insurance Congress Here On January 12

District and Maryland Groups to Hold 19th Annual Meeting.

By Thomas M. Cahill.

Plans are practically completed for the nineteenth annual District of Columbia-Maryland Life Insurance Congress, January 12, at the Willard Hotel. Among speakers will be Milton Bacon, of the New York Life Insurance Co.; A. Kallenberg, of the Mutual Benefit Life Insurance Co.; George Harris, of Sun Life Insurance Co., of Canada; Winthrop G. Batchelder, second vice president of the District of Columbia Life Underwriters Association; Rabbi Abram Simon, R. B. Densmore, of Prudential Life Insurance Co., of New York.

Dwight Scott, of Washington, and Joseph McMillen, of Baltimore, will be in charge of the meeting. Roger Baldwin, of Northwestern Mutual Life Insurance Co., is chairman of the Washington registration and ticket committee.

Cost Accountants' Dinner.

Washington Chapter of the National Association of Cost Accountants will celebrate its fourth anniversary at a dinner to be given at the Hamilton Hotel tomorrow evening at 6:30 o'clock. National officers who will be present for this occasion are F. Richmond Fletcher of Boston, president of the association; Stuart C. McLeod, of New York, secretary; and Miss M. Shaw, assistant secretary. Following a custom established several years ago the birthday meeting is also ladies' night and wives of members will also be guests.

S. C. McLEOD.

After the dinner there will be a technical discussion which will be open to accountants and the public. The speaker will be John C. Larkin, C. P. A., of Syracuse, N. Y., who will talk on "Management Problems of the Small Public Utility." His talk, dealing as it will with the accounting and administrative procedures of small businesses operating under complex Governmental regulation, will be of timely interest.

Mr. Larkin is an authority in the field of telephone company operation and is consultant to the owners of a large number of independent utility organizations. He will discuss in particular the possibilities of the small business enterprise in a field conceded generally to be subject to monopolistic control and rigid Governmental supervision. His experience qualifies him as an expert in the management problems of a type of enterprise where the right to adequate revenue must be proved from records of costs.

The speaker will be introduced by C. Milton Clark, president of the local chapter, who will preside at the meeting. Officers of the Chesa-

Bank Loans Gain, Reserves Decline

A drop in reserves with Federal Reserve banks and another weekly increase in commercial loans was reported last evening by the Federal Reserve Board for member institutions in 101 leading cities. In its condition statement of reporting member banks for the week ended December 9, the board said reserves declined $54,000,000 to $5,317,000,000.

This was attributable in part to a previously reported increase of $31,000,000 in money in circulation. Money in circulation usually rises during the Christmas season, declining again after the first of the year.

Reflecting business demands for credit, the bank's advances to agriculture, industry and commerce rose $32,000,000 to $4,100,000,000, or $696,000,000 above the same date last year.

Continental Can Plans New Plant in Florida

New York, Dec. 14.—Continental Can Company, Inc., today announced the purchase of a forty-five acre plot in Tampa, Fla., which will be used as a site for a new can manufacturing plant, the construction of which will start shortly.

The new plant will be equipped for the manufacture of packers' cans, and will include warehouse buildings, truck and freight car loading platforms with siding connections to the Seaboard and Atlantic Coast Railroads.

N. Y. Central Net Doubles in October

New York, Dec. 14 (AP).—Net income after fixed charges of the New York Central Railroad Co. and its leased lines in October was $2,616,357, equal to 52 cents a share on the capital stock. This compared with $1,264,102, or 25 cents a share in the same month last year.

Net income after fixed charges in the first ten months totaled $6,117,663, equal to $1.22 a share on the capital, compared with a deficit of $5,120,979 in the same period of 1935.

Copper, Lead, Zinc Prices At 6-Year Top

Rubber, Cottonseed Oil, Cocoa and Hides Also Score Advances.

By the Associated Press.

New York, Dec. 14.—Industrial metals were in the forefront of a board rise in domestic commodity prices today, accompanying the soaring grain market.

Leading producers marked the price of domestic copper up ½ cent a pound to 11 cents, the highest since 1930. Lead and zinc prices also were advanced to the highest prices since 1930. Zinc was quoted at 5.25 cents a pound, East St. Louis up .10 of a cent.

Rubber futures advanced about ¼ of a cent a pound, with December options selling above 19 cents.

Cottonseed oil, cocoa futures and hides also scored sizable advances. Cotton was moderately higher in the New York futures market.

Spurred by heavy demand, much of it said to have come from European armament makers, the price of lead advanced today to the highest level since May, 1930, while copper for export was quoted at a figure equalling the high for the year and the best since December, 1930. St. Joseph Lead Co. set the new price of its product at 5.55 cents a pound in New York and 5.35 in East St. Louis, an increase in each case of .20 of a cent. American Smelting and Refining Co. followed with a boost of .10 of a cent a pound to 5.40 cents in New York and 5.25 cents in East St. Louis.

Transactions in copper for export at 10.90 cents a pound, which compared with 10.72-80 cents last week.

Gold and Silver Imports Decline

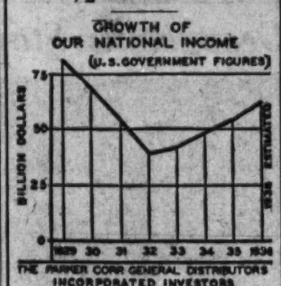

A sharp drop in gold imports during November was reported yesterday by the Commerce Department, supporting Administration contentions that the current inflow has passed its peak. Imports for the month were $75,769,661, compared with $218,928,514 in October, $171,866,183 in September and $210,809,729 in November, 1935. Of the gold imports last month, $44,664,551 came from the United Kingdom.

Silver imports last month were $4,641,634, compared with $26,930,710 in the previous month and $60,065,379 in the same month last year. Silver exports were $411,251, $267,986 and $511,864, respectively.

British Board of Trade.

London, Dec. 14 (AP).—The following are the Board of Trade figures for the month of November: Total imports, £78,670,000; exports of British products, £38,440,000; reexports, £4,340,000; total exports, £42,780,000; excess of imports, £35,890,000.

National Income Up 6½ Billion in Year

Boston, Mass., Dec. 14.—National income for this year is estimated at $60,500,000,000, a jump of $6,500,000,000 over last year, but far below the $81,000,000,000 national income of 1929. Income this year is equivalent to $476 per capita, compared with $313 in 1932.

Cotton Irregular; December Lower

New York, Dec. 14 (AP).—December liquidation and fresh speculative demand in forward positions brought irregular changes in cotton today. The market closed 6 points net lower to 17 higher. March, which rallied from 12.42 to 12.48, closed at 12.43.

Cottonseed Oil.

Cottonseed oil was firm and active today with prices at new high records for the season. There was more general buying, which seemed to be promoted by strength of lard and grains and the shortage of oil fats in Europe.

Employment Climbs to New Recovery Peak

October Total 41,149,000, Against 1933 Low of 33,265,000.

New York, Dec. 14.—The total number of persons employed in the United States rose from 40,833,000 in September to 41,149,000 in October, a new high for the recovery movement, according to the Alexander Hamilton Institute. The October figure represented an increase of nearly 2,000,000 during the past year and an increase of nearly 8,000,000 since the low for the depression in March 1933 when only 33,265,000 persons were employed. As compared with the pre-depression peak in September 1929 when 45,494,000 persons were employed, the figure for October 1936 was lower by only 345,000.

The number of persons unemployed in October declined to 10,020,000, a new low for the recovery movement. This represented a decrease of 6,629,000 from the depression's peak of 16,649,000 in March 1933. An increase of 2,724,000 in the supply of workers since September 1929 and the fact that there were 2,951,000 persons unemployed in September 1929 explain why the number of unemployed persons totaled 10,020,000 in October 1926 when the number of employed persons was lower than in September 1929 by only 4,345,000.

The present outlook is that when the December figures become available they will show that unemployment this month dropped below the 10,000,000 mark.

$6,400,000 West. Pac. R. R. Issue Offered

2¾% Trustees' Certificates Are Priced at 100 and Interest.

A new issue of $6,400,000, the Western Pacific Railroad Co. 2¾ per cent trustees' certificates, dated December 1, 1936, and maturing December 1, 1938, will be placed on the market today at 100 per cent and interest to yield 2.75 per cent by a banking group headed by Lazard Freres & Co., Inc. The security is regarded as unusual in that the trustees' certificats, issued under authorization by the Federal court and with the approval of the Interstate Commerce Commission, will enjoy priority over all other obligations of the company, which has been in reorganization under section 77B since November, 1935. The book value of the railroad's property is in excess of $140,000,000.

Participating in the financing, which is believed to represent the first public offering of trustees' certificates by any company in reorganization under this section of the Federal bankruptcy act, are Blyth & Co., Inc., and Brown, Harriman & Co., Inc.

Of the proceeds of the issue, $3,400,000 will be devoted to the continuance during 1937 of the rehabilitation of the railroad property, the program for which is ultimately expected to entail an expenditure of more than $10,000,000. The balance of the proceeds will be applied to the redemption of $3,000,000 trustees' certificates, payable on or before January 1, which were originally underwritten by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and later subscribed to by holders of the company's first mortgage 5s of 1936, now in default. The new trustees' certificates are callable at 100 and accrued interest at any time on 30 days' notice.

Proposals

COMMISSIONERS, D. C., WASHINGTON, December 12, 1936. Sealed proposals will be received at Room 509 District Building until 2:00 P. M. DECEMBER 29, 1936, and then publicly opened, for the construction of addition, including all necessary remodeling, to the Lafayette School, located on the east side of Broad Branch Road, N.W., between Northampton and Quesada Streets. All prospective bidders are hereby notified that any bid submitted in response to this advertisement must be accompanied by a statement of facts in detail of the business and technical organization of the bidder available for the contemplated work, including his financial resources. The Commissioners expressly reserve the rights to reject any bid in which the facts as to the business and technical organization, financial resources or experience compared with the project bid upon and based upon past known performance of the bidder justify such rejection. Certified check for $50, payable to the Collector of Taxes, D. C., to insure return in good condition, should accompany each request for proposals, specifications and drawings, to the Chief Clerk, Engineer Department, Room 427 District Building.

Body of Jobless Man Found in Water Tower

Richmond, Dec. 14 (AP)—The body of Oscar Lee Saunders, 56, unemployed railroad worker, was found yesterday floating in a 30-foot Atlantic Coast Line water tower near Richmond. He had been missing from his home since Friday.

Coroner Thomas G. Pretlow of Chesterfield County described Saunders' death as "probable suicide." Relatives said Saunders was depressed because he had been unable to find employment for two months.

Colored Man And Wife Die in Burning Home

Fishersville, Va., Dec. 14 (AP).—William Martin, 21, Negro, and his 18-year-old wife, Edna, were burned to death in their home near here yesterday when some fuel with which the woman was starting a fire exploded. Dr. Glenn C. Campbell, coroner, today returned a verdict of accidental death.

Trapped by the flames, their bodies were consumed. The house was destroyed.

Motorist Sued for $13,000

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Cumberland, Md., Dec. 14.—Leon Coleman and his wife, Catherine I. Coleman, have filed two suits totaling $13,000, against A. Hayes Northcraft, charging negligence. Mrs. Coleman claimed to have been permanently injured and disfigured as the result of a collision on Pear street, October 30, in which Northcraft's machine figured.
